

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

LONDON, JANUARY 13, 1849.

There are some rules of practice, both at law and in equity, so contrary to modern reason, that no one can conceive how they ever came to be rules, and that the Courts are continually compelled to make fine distinctions in order to elude the rule as far as possible. Of this character is the rule of Courts of Equity, that, on an interlocutory proceeding, such as a motion for a receiver, or an injunction, or to compel the defendant to pay money into court, the title must be wholly taken from the answer; and that not only can no affidavits be read against the answer, but that they cannot even be read to substantiate facts ignored by the answer, if directly or indirectly they affect the title.

We have more than once heard judges, in administering this rule, apparently simple, but complicated in its application, wonder how it ever came to be the rule; and Lord Eldon, who, great judge as he was, delighted in a legal absurdity, if it was but refined enough, and inconsistent enough with substantial justice, put the absurdity of the rule in its most glaring light when he refused to revive an injunction which had been dissolved upon the answer, though the grand jury had found a true bill on an indictment for perjury on that very answer. For, said his Lordship, "the grand jury may have believed, and in most cases must have believed, those very persons upon their oaths for that purpose, whose depositions this Court would not permit to be read for the purpose of discrediting the answer." (Clapham v. White, 8 Ves. 35).

So that the rule of practice is, that the defendant's answer is of such conclusive credibility, that nothing can be allowed to be heard but it, even though you have the strongest evidence that it is false. Whether the rule originally took its rise from this, that as in equity you have a right to ransack the defendant's conscience, so as a set-off you shall believe what the defendant says until the cause is at issue, and that, as a consequence, all counter-evidence would be useless, because it could not be believed; or whether the rule took its rise from some imagined difference between the solemnity of swearing an answer and that of swearing an affidavit, it is now difficult, nay impossible, to ascertain. Why the rule should still be retained, when it is execrated by judges, and serves at this day no purpose but to entangle and complicate interlocutory applications, it is as difficult to understand. A defendant's answer is evidence, nothing more. It is the deliberate assertion on oath of a person entitled to credit, unless he be discredited. So is an affidavit. Affidavits are admitted as to matters of fact; why should they not be as to matters of title? Suppose a cestui que trust files a bill for the appointment of new trustees, and for a receiver, and the trustee admits the plaintiff's title, but denies the misconduct: an affidavit may be read against the answer as to the misconduct; but if the trustee denies the identity of the plaintiff, or the execution of the instrument under which he claims, then an affidavit cannot be read against the answer. What possible rational ground can be assigned for this distinction? If it be said, that, by receiving and believing affidavits on the question of title, the Court might be, in fact, wrongfully ejecting the defendant, the answer is, so it might by hearing affidavits as to acts of misconduct. If a man is wrongfully turned out of possession, it cannot matter to him whether it is because the Court wrongfully believes he never had title to be in, or because it wrongfully believes that he has so behaved that he must be turned out. After all, what is title but matter of fact? And is not the whole distinction between matter of title and matter of fact a mere delusion? If I allege that I am entitled in fee-simple, the foundation of my title must be a deed or instrument, or act of some kind by which the estate has become vested in me: in other words, my title rests upon some act having been done in reference to a particular individual; so that allegation of title resolves itself into allegation of the fact, that a settlement has been executed, or a will made, or some other thing done, and of the fact that I am the person designated in the instrument, or contemplated in reference to the thing done. How do these facts differ from the fact, that a spade has been inserted into meadow, converting it into pasture, or the fact, that young trees have been grubbed up? If we take the cases where the affidavits are not allowed to be read, because a fact denied or ignored affects the question of title, as in Edwards v. Jones (1 Phil. 501) and Sherriff v. Barnard, (8 Sim. 161), the distinction between matter of fact and matter of title becomes so ludicrously thin as to be scarcely appreciable. That, in such cases in particular, gross injustice may be done by the rule, is clear. Take such a case as Sherriff v. Barnard, where the question was, whether certain constructions were landlord's or tenant's fixtures; consequently, the question was as to title; and the disputed fact was, whether sheds were or were not let into the soil. Now, on this fact being stated in one way by the answer, there can be no doubt, that, according to the practice of the Court, though 500 affidavits were filed, (to use Lord Eldon's expression in Clapham v. White), the Court could not look at them, but must give credit to the answer. So that, in a case where, on a very simple question, really and purely of fact, as much so as the question whether A. beat B., where, if any given number of respectable witnesses deposed against the answer, there could be no doubt in the mind of the man that the defendant ought to be forthwith restrained, the mind of the judge would be compelled to refuse all interference till the hearing; that is, would be compelled to give to a defendant, believed to be bad enough to swear falsely or evasively, abundant time to do that very mischief which the plaintiff comes to the court to prevent, by interlocutory proceeding, because, if once done, it cannot be remedied.

As to any notion that an answer is a more solemn thing than an affidavit, we are not aware that there is even any such legal fiction; but if there is, it is a pure fiction, one form of evidence being just as solemn as another, both being upon oath.

The rule is, in fact, purely technical—purely entangling and mischievous, and totally without any respectable paternity. Far better would it be, in our humble apprehension, if, on interlocutory applications, the answer were, in all cases and for all purposes, treated merely as an affidavit, leaving the evidence on both sides subject only to the ordinary rules of evidence as to admissibility. This will some day be the rule of the court, but not till the surpassing irrationality of the present rule shall have produced some very glaring and monstrous mischief.

TRUSTEE AND CESTUI QUE TRUST—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

The point involved in the case of Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips, (11 Jur. 692: 16 Law Journ., Q. B., 269; 10 Q. B. Rep. 130), which we discussed at some length in a former article, (ante, vol. 11, part 2, p. 310), has not, we believe, yet received any further illustration from the Bench—a case in the Queen's Bench, in which it was raised, having gone off upon another point; and a case in the Common Pleas, in which an adjudication on the point will probably be required, being still pending. But as the point is, to conveyancers, one of the most important that can arise upon the Statute of Limitations, and as the accuracy of our account of the case of Doe v. Phillips has been called in question by Messrs. Keating and Willes, in a passage which we cannot help thinking forms an exception to the general soundness of their notes to the late Mr. Smith's "Leading Cases," we make no apology for recurring to the subject. Messrs. Keating and Willes give the following account of the case of Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips:—

"There has been a recent case in the Queen's Bench (Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips, 12th February, 1847, 16 Law Journ. 269) upon the subject here discussed, which has excited a great deal of attention, and been thought by some to have decided, that the possession of the cestui que trust for twenty years, without acknowledgment, will bar the right of the trustee under the 2nd and 3rd sections of the statute. It is, however, submitted, that the decision, when examined, does not involve that proposition. The facts of the case are thus stated in the report:—'The lessor of the plaintiff claimed the premises, which were the subject of the action, under limited letters of administration granted to him by the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the 14th of August, 1843, of the goods, chattels, and effects of one Holyhead, deceased, to whom a satisfied term of 500 years in the premises in question had been assigned, by an indenture, dated the 7th day of October, 1767, upon trust to attend the inheritance, the beneficial interest being vested in certain minors, on whose behalf the lessor of the plaintiff brought the action.' It was held, he could not recover. Now, it will be observed, it is not stated that the cestui que trust was the party in possession; and the statement that the action was brought on behalf of the persons beneficially interested would rather seem to shew the contrary. The argument, however, all through the case seems to have proceeded on the assumption that the possession was that of the cestui que trust, as the effect of a tenancy at will and its determination formed the chief subject of contest, which could scarcely have been in question if any other than the cestui que trust had been in possession; but even assuming this to have been so, still it was conceded on all sides that there had been no demand of possession. And taking the interlocutory observations of the judges during the argument, together with their more formal judgments, the view taken by the Court seems to have been, either that no tenancy at will had ever existed under the circumstances, in which case sects. 2 and 3 of the statute would be a bar, or, if a tenancy at will was created, it had not been determined,—the bringing of the action alone, without a previous demand of possession, not being sufficient for that purpose: thus rather fortifying than impugning the suggestions made on this subject in the present note. Whether the facts of the case really placed the lessor of the plaintiff in the dilemma suggested, or whether the death of Holyhead, the original trustee, would have changed the tenancy at will into a tenancy at sufferance, and so have dispensed with the necessity of a demand of possession, or whether sect. 6 of the statute would have affected the case, and how far, were questions which it was not necessary for the court to discuss, as it seems to have been assumed in the case that there had been no determination of the tenancy at will, except by bringing the action, and upon that assumption the decision was grounded. 'If, on the other hand,' said Lord Denman, C. J., 'you make the defendants tenants at will to the lessor of the plaintiff, there has been no demand of possession, and so no right is shewn to recover.' And Mr. Justice Patteson observed, 'If bringing an action now is enough to enable the lessor of the plaintiff to recover, I cannot see why he might not have done so at any time since the assignment in 1767.' 'As soon as it is conceded,' said Mr. Justice Coleridge, 'that the termor has a right to recover without any proceedings preliminary to bringing the action, we must look to see what effect sections 2 and 3 have upon that right; and I clearly think the effect is to bar it.' Whilst, therefore, there are passages in the judgments of the learned judges in the above case which render it questionable whether they considered the case of trustee and cestui que trust to be excluded from the operation of sections 2 and 3 of the statute, yet it is submitted, that the Court never intended to decide, nor in fact decided, that the possession of the cestui que trust for twenty years will bar the right of the trustee." (Vol. 2, p. 411, n. (a)).

Now, these observations, we submit, do nothing more than reflect the confusion in which the Court of Queen's Bench left the case of Doe v. Phillips. The report of the case in the Law Journal is meagre and defective in many particulars, and the learned annotators have not cited the fuller and more accurate report in THE JURIST, a reference to which would, probably, have given them a clearer notion of the point which was really discussed and intended to be decided in that case (and see the short but accurate report in 10 Q. B. Rep. 130). But even the report in the Law Journal (with reference to which alone our former observations were written) will not, we submit, bear the interpretation which Messrs. Keating and Willes have put upon it. It is there stated that the lessor of the plaintiff claimed the premises by virtue of a term of years created in 1767, and attendant upon the inheritance, the beneficial interest being vested in certain minors, in whose behalf the lessor of the plaintiff brought the action. The lessor therefore rested his case on this, that he was trustee for some other person than the persons who were in possession when the action was brought; and the only topics of defence taken notice of by the Court were, the want of a demand of possession before bringing the action, and the effect of the Statute of Limitations. Now, the only ground for requiring a prior demand of possession must have been, that the defendants were tenants at will of the plaintiff; but the plaintiff's case, as stated in the report, was, that he was suing on behalf of his cestuis que trust, who were, therefore, out of possession; whence it must be inferred, that the defendants were not in possession as cestuis que trust under the lessor of the plaintiff; and, consequently, were not tenants at his will, but trespassers, and so were not entitled to any demand of possession. The suggestion, therefore, by the Court, that a demand of possession might have been necessary, was not supported by the facts of the case; and their judgment must be taken to have been a decision upon the single point on which the rule to enter a nonsuit was granted, and which was the only question to which any prominence was given in the argument—namely, as to the effect of the Statute of Limitations. Now, the defence founded on the Statute of Limitations could not have been, that both the trustee and the cestuis que trust had been dispossessed more than twenty years before the commencement of the action, because against such a defence, supported by evidence, no argument could have been raised; but the defence must have been founded on this, that, though the cestuis que trust had been in possession within twenty years, the trustee himself had not—a defence necessarily involving the point which we originally represented to have been the point discussed and decided in that case. The observation of Coleridge, J., that, "as soon as it was conceded that the termor had a right to recover without any proceedings preliminary to bringing the action, the case was to be decided by reference to the 2nd and 3rd sections only," shews, not that the effect of the saving in sect. 7 did not come into question, but that the Court mistook the scope and effect of that saving, which is capable of operation, as well in cases where a prior demand is necessary, as in cases where such demand is not necessary; the effect of that saving being, as we contend, to preserve the implied tenancy of a cestui que trust at the will of his trustee from extinction by the general enactment in sect. 7; so that, if the cestui que trust has not been dispossessed for twenty years, the trustee, though he may have been out of possession for more than twenty years, can sustain an ejectment against the person in possession, having first demanded possession if the defendant is the cestui que trust, or without having demanded possession if the defendant is a mere intruder.

The report in the Law Journal states, that the ejectment was for undivided shares of gavelkind property in Kent, from which it is to be conjectured, that the defendants were cestuis que trust of other shares not claimed in the action, and hence probably the confusion on which we have been commenting arose. But, as to the shares claimed by the persons on whose behalf the action was brought, the defendants were strangers and trespassers. (See 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 12, as to possession by coparceners, tenants in common, &c.) The report in THE JURIST makes this clear. From that report, it appears, that, in 1766, the entirety of the estate was purchased by Stephen Hubbard, and the term assigned to a trustee for him. Stephen Hubbard devised the estate to his niece, Elizabeth Trigg, for life, with remainder to her children. The niece had issue nine children, three of whom died in infancy, including John Brown, who left two children, on whose behalf the action was brought against the sisters and the husbands of the sisters of John Brown. The report in THE JURIST attributes the following expressions to Patteson, J., which clearly shew, that the question was as we have represented it:—"If there was a tenancy at will, it began more than twenty years ago; and the 7th section says, that the tenancy shall be deemed to have determined at the end of the first year after the commencement of the tenancy." It appears from the report, that Elizabeth Trigg married in 1801, and had nine children. The action was brought in 1844; so that it is possible, that neither the termor nor the cestuis que trust had been in possession within twenty years; but if so, the question of tenancy at will could never have been raised.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36*l.* per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 122,000*l.* per annum.

BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Bere; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

LONDON, JANUARY 20, 1849.

We have already, in a former Number of this Journal, in reference to an occurrence that had then lately taken place, advocated the propriety, not merely of an appeal in criminal cases on fact as well as law, but the establishment of some machinery, by which, if, by the result of the inevitable defects of human institutions, an accused person is convicted and punished, and afterwards satisfactorily establishes his innocence, he shall receive at the hands of the State a solemn reversal of the judgment, and compensation for the actual and substantial loss that he can shew he has incurred. We hardly expected, when we wrote our former observations, that so soon again the imperfection of our system of criminal investigation would be manifested, by the discovery of the innocence of another person accused, convicted, and punished. The case we allude to is that of Mr. Barber, who has recently published a pamphlet*, in which all the details of his very singular case are narrated; and, certainly, it is one of those cases which strikingly support the argument of those who contend for a general appeal in criminal cases. We are not, however, going to dwell on the peculiar features of Mr. Barber's case, for the examination of which we refer our readers to the well and most temperately written pamphlet itself, but to renew our attacks upon the perpetuation of the non-appeal system. We have read and heard many arguments, and from men of varied positions and acquirements, against allowing appeals; but they all appear to resolve themselves into the fear of trouble, the fear of expense, or the tenacious clinging of the Blackstonian cast of mind to the worship of all that is, because it is. It is said, that, if you have an appeal on matter of fact, you must have it to another jury; and if to one, why not to a second and a third; and where is it to stop? And that the evidence that will convince one jury, will of course convince another. But, in the first place, we require to know why of necessity an appeal must be from one jury to another jury, if there could be shewn any substantial reason for calling in another species of tribunal? What is there about this jury so eternally thrown in our faces, that is so marvellous—so allwise and penetrating, that Englishmen cannot disconnect the idea of justice, and especially criminal justice, from that of a jury? Let any man hear the stories that every day's practice brings home from circuit, of the pranks of juries, and he would fancy there could not be a tribunal more likely to err. Yet let anything be proposed in or out of Parliament to withdraw from juries the ultimate finding of facts, and forthwith grave men arise, and forgetting, or choosing to forget, how many times they have laughed at the fatuity of juries, pronounce grave eulogiums on the trial by jury—palladium of our liberties, &c. But, in the next place, why should it be assumed, that what will convince one jury must necessarily convince another? In equity, a Vice-Chancellor is a jury, and the Chancellor is an appeal jury; yet we do not find that the Chancellor, on appeal, always draws from the evidence the same conclusion that a Vice-Chancellor has done. On the contrary, nothing is more common than for a decree to be reversed, because the evidence does not, in the mind of the Chancellor, support the conclusion of fact drawn by the Court below. In the next place, all the while that objections are made to appealing, on matter of fact, to any other tribunal than a jury, there is, in reality such an appeal; for what else is the application ad misericordiam to the Crown? It is, in form, a prayer for pardon; it is, in reality, an appeal to the Secretary of State to review the facts—for the law, we believe, he never attempts to review; and the Secretary of State refers it to the Under-secretary of State, who is, of late years at least, always a Barrister. So that there is really an appeal from a jury to one single minister, not a lawyer—who, aiding his inquiries by the assistance of a lawyer, may and does from time to time decide that a jury has incorrectly found its facts. How similar in principle, yet how superior in practice, would be an appeal to a given body of judges on matter of fact as well as of law!

But then it is said, if there were such an appeal, every convicted person would appeal, with or without ground; and, as most convicted persons are penniless, who is to pay the expense, and what check would there be on frivolous appeals? The answer is, first, the country does, in fact, pay a great deal for appeals in civil cases, many of which are frivolous, notwithstanding the check of costs. The whole establishment of appeal judges and officers in civil cases is paid for, not by the suitor, but by the public, and probably far exceeds the expense that would be incurred by criminal appeals, if every criminal case involving life or transportation were appealed. And if civil suitors are entitled to the privilege of throwing on the country a burthen in respect of their appeals, why should not criminal suitors have a like privilege? But a further answer is, that though the State has a right to protect itself by punishing evil-doers, it has no right to establish for their protection a confessedly imperfect machinery, and to assume the results of that machinery to be correct merely for the purpose of saving expense.

With regard to the other branch of the subject, the duty of the State to reverse an improper decision with as much solemnity and publicity as that with which it was made, and to compensate the person who has lost, not by his own, but by the error of the State, we conceive the question to be so free from doubt and difficulty, that nothing but the innate indisposition of all States to admit error and accept innovation, could have prevented the principle from being adopted long ago. The justice of the thing can be no more questioned than the justice of Lord Campbell's Act, imposing on railway companies, who have killed men by the carelessness of their servants, the liability to compensate the families of the sufferers; and the difficulty of estimating what a man has lost by losing his business or profession for a given number of years, would not be so great as to require a Laplace to calculate it. It would be about as difficult as it is to compute the pecuniary value of a man's life, under Lord Campbell's Act, and not more so.

It is a long time since a case of so much interest and importance as that of The Attorney-General v. Strange and Prince Albert v. *Strange has been decided; the interest and importance of the case not depending merely, though much, on the rank and position of the parties engaged, but also on the originality of the question at issue, and the extensive consequences that may follow the decision.

The facts of the case have been so presented to the Court as to require it to decide this question: whether there is a right of property in literary or artistical composition, entitling the proprietor of the composition to restrain any person, not having his consent, from publishing to the world a catalogue enumerating and identifying the compositions produced; and the Court has decided that there is such a right of property.

* Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, 16th January, 1849, not yet reported.

The judgment of the very eminent person who has decided this case is, as might be expected, from his high reputation, and from the nature of the subject, at once elaborate and argumentative, subtle and cautious. Still, if we correctly apprehend its effect, it proceeds on the ground, not of fraud, but of a right of property being in the plaintiff; and, on this view of the question, we propose to submit a few observations to our readers.

The case is, unquestionably, one of the first impression. We did not hear it stated in the judgment that there is any direct authority in point, and we believe there is none. The Court referred to cases operating by way of analogy; and the judgment was, therefore, that which, to a lawyer's ear, is rare, but delightful—a judicial argument upon principle.

Now, the question upon principle comes, in effect, to this—whether there is a right of property, not in an unpublished manuscript or print, for it is clear there is such a property, but in the fact of such a manuscript or print having been composed. Property, in the legal sense, can, we apprehend, exist only in some material thing. There is no property in the invention of a mechanical principle in the abstract; that is settled. There is property in a principle applied in practice; that is, there is property in the material exhibition of the mechanical idea. So there is property in a literary idea, materialised by being exhibited, explained, manifested in the form of words written, or, under particular legislative enactments, spoken. But there is, we apprehend, and can be no property at law in an idea unmaterialised; and for this, if for no other reason, that there cannot be property except in that which is capable of identification—that which has conditions of existence distinguishing it from every other thing; whereas an idea, until materialised, cannot be identified—cannot be measured by or confined within any boundaries—cannot, in fact, have precise attributes peculiar to its existence, distinguishing it as a thing different from any other thing. Property, the jus proprietatis, seems, in fact, to require of necessity, to satisfy the term, something material; and when we talk of a man's property in his ideas, it should not be forgotten that the law has hitherto not noticed any such property, except when the ideas have been connected with something material, such as writing, drawing, painting, or the like. Within this view of property fall clearly the cases of unpublished manuscripts or prints. There the author has materialised his ideas: he has embodied them in the form of words written, or of figures delineated upon paper. He has produced a material thing, expressing through matter particular ideas to the mind of the reader or looker. But if a man has conceived only the idea of a work or a picture, has he, can he, have any property in that idea until he has clothed it in material form? Suppose, for instance, the Laocoong roup never to have existed, and that an artist had formed the idea of such a group, could he maintain a right of property in the abstract idea of the central figure of a father surrounded by sons, and all struggling in the coils of a serpent; that is, could he maintain a title to property in the idea, to the extent of preventing any other person from embodying it after his own fashion of embodying it? Certainly, no decided case has gone that length. Again, suppose a person of literary imagination to conceive the fable of The Paradise Lost, would it be pretended that he could refuse himself to clothe it in language, and at the same time prevent every person from clothing that fable in language of his own? If any such doctrine were attempted to be maintained, the result would necessarily be, that, in a short space of time, all subjects of interest might be monopolised by those who would not take the pains to materialise them; and there would remain nothing on which the labours of the writer or artist could be employed.

Now, if there be no property in an idea unmate-rialised, how can there be property in a mere fact? If I have composed a variety of works, literary or artistic, I have property in the works; but have I property not only in the works, but in the fact that I have composed them? The fact is not a material thing—it is a mere truth, equivalent to what, in science, is commonly, perhaps not accurately, termed a principle; that is, the true assertion that something is. Does the law of England recognise any such property? We apprehend not. A man has a right of property in his land, in his house, in his gems, in his literary composition, in his painting, in his sculpture; but the fact that he possesses or has produced such things, is a mere piece of knowledge—an assertion that a particular thing has an existence; and in that piece of knowledge, wholly unmaterialised by him, he has, and can have, as we humbly submit, no right of property. Then, if that be so, let us see what is a catalogue. A catalogue may possibly be descriptive, to the extent of being a piracy of the thing catalogued. Possibly, for instance, a person of great skill might so describe in a catalogue the Laocoon, as to convey to the mind of an artist a perfect representation of the group; and possibly, independently of the doctrine of The Attorney-General v. Strange, such a catalogue might be held an infringement of the copyright of the author of the group. This point is not, however, the point in The Attorney-General v. Strange, in which it does not appear, from the judgment, that anything more was conveyed by the catalogue than knowledge of the fact, that the plaintiffs had produced certain etchings, with sufficient description to identify the subjects of those etchings, and no more. And then the question is, is such a catalogue anything more than a statement of certain facts, viz. the facts that A. has written certain manuscripts on given subjects, or possesses certain things? In order to entitle the proprietors of manuscripts in such a case, to maintain an injunction on the ground of property, we apprehend the doctrine must go the length of recognising property not in the manuscript itself merely, but in the secret of its existence; because clearly catalogue does not touch the manuscript itself: it announces—it divulges—the secret of its existence; the property, therefore, must be in that secret.

If the secret were in itself the result of a mental operation, such as a medical recipe, which is itself the result of invention and mental combination, it has been decided indirectly that in such a secret there is no property; for an injunction to restrain publication of such a secret (where there has been no fraud) is refused, on the ground, that, until made known, the Court cannot judge whether the defendant is publishing the particular secret, and, if made known, then all the world would have a right to use it. (Newberry v. Tames, 2 Mer. 446). This case assumes that there is no property in a medical secret; that is, no property in the mere knowledge of facts. If that be so where the knowledge of the facts is itself a mental production, how can there be property in a secret, which is not itself the result of any mental operation beyond the inevitable perception by the mind of an author that he has produced his own work?

But then it is said that the owner of property, at least of such property as literary property, is entitled to every use that can be made of it, and to prevent any one else from making any use of it without his consent; and that making a catalogue of a man's works is making a use which he himself might make of it. But, in the first place, what must be understood by a right to make every use of one's property? That right must surely be limited with reference to the proprietor's own conduct, and to the general rights of mankind. If A. de facto keeps his picture or his literary work concealed, of course no question can arise. But suppose him to hold up his picture to view, or read his work aloud at an open window while I am passing, surely no declaration on his part that he does not consent to my seeing or hearing it, can deprive me of my right to do so, or of my corresponding right to publish an account of my own acts, viz. of my having seen and heard, and of identifying what I have seen and heard? To come closer to the point of the actual case of The Attorney-General v. Strange: if the author allows his work to pass into the hands of his servant, and that servant exhibits it to me, (without, of course, my having notice of the confidence, so as to exclude the question of trust and fraud), can any absence of consent on the part of the author deprive me of my right to look, and afterwards to say that I have looked, and what I have seen? If that is the law, and on the ground of property and its incidents, then the right of property is not in the thing, but in the privacy; the right is, not to have the thing, but to conceal it. Now, there may be a right of privacy, and, if there is not, we should be quite ready to admit the propriety of its creation. But what we contend is, that, looking at the legal notion of property—looking at the common notion of property—there cannot be property in privacy; and that the right of use of one's property which consists in concealing it, or of reserving to himself the power of making its existence known, ceases the moment that, by any act or any neglect of the owner, the concealment itself de facto so far ceases as to expose the property to the perception of a stranger not bound by any trust or confidence. To extend the right beyond that would, it appears to us, be, not protecting the owner of the property in his right to every legitimate use of his property, but depriving the stranger of the right of using his powers of perception.

We are quite sure that none of our readers will suppose for an instant that our sympathies are with such an act as that of the defendant in The Attorney-General v. Strange. But it is no part of our province to comment upon it: our duty in this department of this Journal, being limited to the expression of our humble doubts, whether the legal doctrine laid down in the case under discussion is supported by principle. Neither does it fall within our strict line to observe upon the peculiarity of the order made in The Attorney-General v. Strange, for sustaining an injunction where the defendant denies the plaintiff's title, the title never having been established at law, without putting the plaintiff on terms so to establish it.

The facts of this case are peculiar; but, in general, our readers will recollect that the weight of authority is in favour of equity refusing to decide a contested legal right; sending the plaintiff to law to establish it; and sustaining the injunction in the meantime, if, as would probably be held in this case, the mischief done to the plaintiff by dissolving the injunction would be irremediable, should the plaintiff ultimately establish a legal right.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.——INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

LONDON, JANUARY 27, 1849.

Several questions have arisen on the construction of the proviso in Lord Denman's Act, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), whereby it is declared, that parties to any suit "individually named in the record," or persons "in whose immediate and individual behalf any action may be brought or defended, either wholly or in part," are not to be rendered competent by the operation of the statute.

With regard to the first branch of this proviso, it has been decided, that a prochein amy is not "a party to the suit, individually named in the record;" and, therefore, that he is a competent witness for the plaintiff, as the remaining objection, on the ground of interest by his liability for the costs, is taken away by the enacting clause of the statute. (Sinclair v. Sinclair, 13 Mee. & W. 640). A prochein amy is simply a party appointed by the Court to look after the interests of the infant and to manage the suit for him. He has a control over the cause, and is liable for the costs; but, in other respects, he resembles the attorney for the party to the cause. The admissions of a prochein amy or guardian are not evidence against the infant plaintiff or defendant; (Eggleston v. Speke, 3 Mod. 258; Cowling v. Ely, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 366; Webb v. Smith, Ry. & M. 106); which is an additional proof, if any were required, of the absence of that identity of interest which prevails among co-plaintiffs or co-defendants. The relation existing between a prochein amy and his infant client was fully considered in the case of Morgan v. Thorne, (7 Mee. & W. 310).

The test of a witness being a person "in whose immediate or individual behalf the action is brought or defended" appears to be, would his declarations be receivable against the party on whose behalf he is called to give evidence? On the trial of an action for money had and received, it appeared that the plaintiff, after having deposited an omnibus with the defendant (an auctioneer) for sale, sold it to a man named Smith. The defendant, however, on the next day, sold it by auction to another party for a higher price; and the plaintiff sought to recover this sum from him. On the other hand, Smith claimed the money; and he, being called as a witness for the defendant, said on the voir dire, "I indemnified the defendant: the defendant said at first he would defend the action; I said, 'I will share the loss.'" His evidence was held to be admissible. (Sage v. Robinson, 12 Jur. 1054). Parke, B., observed, "In order to shew this witness incompetent, I think you must make out that he has such a joint interest in the subject-matter of the action as would render declarations of his, evidence against the defendant. Now, certainly, since the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, the merely giving an indemnity against costs does not identify a man with an action so as to let in his declarations; and the question, therefore, is, has there been an agreement between this witness and the defendant jointly to employ the attorney and defend this action?"

Another test, mentioned by Pollock, C. B., was, whether, under the old law, the witness would have required a release to make him competent? If he would, the object of the statute was to render him competent without the expense of a release. The following was also suggested in argument as a test:—Would the witness be immediately affected by the verdict? If he would not, and another suit would be required to be instituted to render him liable in consequence of the verdict, he should be admitted as a witness. In accordance with the decision in this case, and with the last-mentioned test of the application of the statute, had been the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, in Hill v. Kitching, (3 C. B. 299). In that case, a shipbroker sought to recover commission from a shipowner, for having procured a charterparty to be made with him. A witness called for the plaintiff stated on the voir dire, that he had introduced the owner to the broker; that he had nothing to do with the negotiation, and had no claim on the owner, but that he expected, pursuant to arrangement and to custom among brokers, to receive half the amount of the commission which the plaintiff might recover in the action. He was held to be a competent witness, and not one "in whose immediate or individual behalf" the action was brought. Tindal, C. J., observed, that if it had appeared the plaintiff had made over to the witness a moiety of the commission, then he would not have been competent; but that it was not so; and that the witness, though he claimed a moiety under a distinct and separate agreement with the plaintiff, had no right to lay his hand upon any portion of the money to be recovered in the action. Maule, J., stated the meaning of the proviso to be, that no person who was the formal plaintiff on the record should be called as a witness; nor any person who, though not the formal plaintiff, was yet substantially so. And the instance put by his Lordship was that of a man assigning a bond and suing the obligor on behalf of the assignee: the latter would be a person in whose immediate and individual behalf the action was brought; and, therefore, not an admissible witness. It had been previously held, at Nisi Prius, by Parke, B., and Wightman, J., that, in an action against a sheriff for not taking a defendant on a ca. sa., the sheriff's officer to whom the warrant had been granted on the writ was a competent witness for the defendant, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. (Wilson v. Magnay, 1 Car. & K. 291; Wheeler v. Senior, Id. 293). The officer in such case can be made liable to the sheriff only through the medium of another action. On these two last cases, however, being cited in Sage v. Robinson, Alderson, B., said they had since been questioned.

We should not omit to notice the case of Hearne v. Turner, (2 C. B. 535), which was an action of trover for two promissory notes. The defendant pleaded, that, before the plaintiff was possessed of the notes, one Mytton was possessed of them, and had been defrauded thereof by parties who wrongfully delivered them to the plaintiff; whereupon the defendant, as Mytton's agent, and by his authority, took the notes from the plaintiff. Mytton was called for the defendant, and having stated on the voir dire that he had not indemnified the defendant, and that he had nothing whatever to do with the action, was held admissible, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 43, s. 26, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85; and, indeed, it seems he would have been so at common law.

Since 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, it appears that a bankrupt is a competent witness to prove the petitioning creditor's debt, or act of bankruptcy, or any fact to support the fiat. (Udal v. Watson, 14 Mee. & W. 254).

The act expressly excepts as a witness "the landlord or other person in whose right any defendants in replevin may make cognisance;" and it was held applicable to the exclusion of the landlord, although the defendant gave no evidence to sustain the cognisance, in which such landlord was mentioned, and offered to abandon it. (Girdlestone v. M'Gowram, 1 C. & K. 702). It should have been abandoned before the trial.

POINTS ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTIONS.

Principles on which the Court acts in aid of a legal Right.]—It is a well-settled doctrine, that equity, in interfering by injunction to restrain infringement of patents, copyright, and the like, only exercises its jurisdiction as ancillary to the legal right; so that, when there is any considerable doubt of the legal title, the Court either does not grant an injunction at all, or only grants it on terms, in order to prevent irreparable injury while the right is being tried at law. The application of these principles to each particular case will depend on the circumstances of the case. And, in considering whether an injunction will be granted or refused, in the first instance, pending the determination of the legal right, it must be considered whether irreparable or great injury will have been done to the defendant by the injunction should the plaintiff's legal right fail, or to the plaintiff by refusing it should he turn out to have a legal right. Generally, it may be said, that, unless the plaintiff's legal right is clear, the Court will not, at this day, grant an injunction while the legal right is in course of trial. (Spottiswoode v. Clarke, 2 Phil. 134). Lord Cottenham, C., in a case of Bacon v. Jones, (4 My. & C. 433), has intimated that he probably never would grant an injunction to restrain infringement of a patent, without putting the plaintiff to try the right at law, if the defendant desired it; and the same doctrine would, no doubt, be applied to any other class of cases where the jurisdiction of equity is ancillary to the legal right. This doctrine was referred to by Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in The Duke of Beaufort v. Morris, (6 Hare, 340), where the plaintiff's right not being admitted, an injunction had been granted without putting the plaintiff to establish his right at law; and his Honor said, he apprehended, that, in such a case, the Lord Chancellor would have required it as a matter of course.

In a case of Wilson v. Tindal, (Web. Pat. Cas. 730), Lord Langdale, M.R., said, arguendo, he had no doubt of the competency of the Court to grant an injunction simpliciter; that it was not the right of parties, in every case, to have an action tried in a court of law; that it is a question of convenience, and the Court is to exercise a fair discretion. However, in Harman v. Jones, (1 Cr. & Ph. 299), Lord Cottenham has held, that where the legal right is in contest, it is the duty of the Court, on granting an injunction, to put the legal question in a course of immediate investigation, whether it be asked for or not; and an injunction simply, without a direction to the plaintiff to bring an action, or without some direction for the trial of the right, will, on the ground of that omission alone, be varied. So, if an injunction is refused, the order is not correct if it does not contain some direction for enabling the plaintiff to proceed at law. (Swallow v. Wallingford, 12 Jur. 403). For if there is no such direction, the plaintiff cannot proceed to establish his right at law, and is not to be deprived of an injunction, and delayed, of necessity, till the hearing of the cause in equity. And where the injunction is to restrain a party from infringing a legal right, the Court ought not to grant it without securing to itself the means of putting him in the same position, in the event of his turning out to be right, as if the Court had not interfered. (Sancster v. Foster, 1 Cr. & Ph. 302).

Digitized by Google

From these cases, and from the doctrine so frequently laid down by Lord Cottenham, that the Court is not to try a legal right, it seems to follow that the dictum in Wilson v. Tindal cannot be supported, and that it is of right in the parties to have a trial at law, of some kind, of the legal right.

Injunctions to restrain Proceedings at Law, on the Ground of Complexity of Account.]—In O'Connor v. Spaight, (1 Sch. & Lef. 305), the defendant had demised premises to the plaintiff, and rent was to be paid, at a certain rate for every acre the premises should be found to contain. Upon this demise the tenant entered, and no rent, as rent, was paid, but divers payments were made to the landlord by bills and otherwise; and then, on the rent being in arrear, the landlord brought ejectment for non-payment. The tenant filed a bill for an account, and applied for an injunction; and Lord Redesdale thought it a proper case to stay the proceedings at law, on the ground that the account was too complex to be taken at law; and, until it was taken, the justice of the case could not appear. This case would be misunderstood if it were supposed to be an authority for the position, that, wherever there is a complex account, it is, on the ground of its complexity alone, fit to be taken in equity, to the exclusion of proceedings at law; or that wherever there is a demand of the defendant at law resting on account, to be set off against that of the plaintiff at law, on that ground alone equity assumes jurisdiction.

If set-off be the ground of restraining proceedings at law, it must be equitable set-off, which is, where the equity of the bill impeaches the very demand of the plaintiff at law, as in O'Connor v. Spaight; not where there are merely specific cross demands, as in Whyte v. O'Brien, (1 S. & S. 551). For where the case is simply one of specific cross demands—as where the plaintiff at law sues upon a clear breach of a contract, and the plaintiff in equity files a bill to restrain the action, on the ground of a complicated account between the parties, in reference to dealings arising out of the contract, but ultra the particular breach of it—equity will not stay execution of a judgment obtained by the plaintiff at law, unless the account is settled. The equity must be, not that, if the defendant at law pays the demand of the plaintiff at law, it may turn out, that, upon setting that off against the balance due from him on the general account, he will have had too much; but that the very substance of his demand at law is cut down by something which cannot be entered into until the general account is taken. (Rawson v. Samuel, 1 Cr. & Ph. 161).

See also the great case of Nixon v. The Taff Railway Company, (House of Lords Cases, 111), which appears at first sight to proceed on mere complication of account, but proceeds in reality upon, and is within the principle of, O'Connor v. Spaight and Rawson v. Samuel, viz. that an account is only proper to be taken in equity upon cross demands, when it can only appear from the result of a general account what is due to the party who would be plaintiff at law, and such account is too complicated to be examined at Nisi Prius. LONDON, FEBRUARY 3, 1849.

A decision of some importance has recently been pronounced by the Vice-Chancellor of England in "the Countess of Rosslyn's trust," (13 Jur. Part I, p. 27), upon the effect of the Accumulation Act, (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98).

The question arose for the first time (as it is alleged) upon a deed. Lady Rosslyn vested a sum of money in trustees, upon trust to accumulate during the joint lives of A. and B., and on the death of A. to pay to B. the interest of the accumulated fund during her life, and after her death to pay the fund to another person. Lady Rosslyn died in 1826; A. died in 1847; and the trustees of the fund having paid it into court under the Trustee Act, B. and the remainder-man now came on petition to have the fund; and the question was, whether the trust for accumulation was void altogether, or only void from the death of Lady Rosslyn.

The point could, of course, not arise under a will; and, therefore, the decisions upon wills would not strictly apply. Under a will, the trust for accumulation must necessarily be for the life of some survivor of the testator, or during some other period exceeding, or which may exceed, the period of twenty-one years fixed by the statute. The same question which is raised upon a will in such a case as Griffiths v. Vere (9 Ves. 127) might, of course, also be raised upon a deed; and there can be no doubt but a trust created by deed, to accumulate for a period which might exceed twenty-one years after the death of the settlor, would be good for the period of twenty-one years. In the case before the Vice-Chancellor, the difficulty, if difficulty there was, arose from the settlor having directed the accumulation, not in terms during her own life, which, if she had done, would be strictly within the words of the statute, but during the lives of other living persons, which might, therefore, prolong the accumulation beyond the life of the settlor. The question was, therefore, whether this was to be read as anything more than a direction to invest during the lives of the cestuis que vies, if the settlor should so long live; or rather, whether the same reasoning which is applied to the statute with regard to a trust for accumulation by will, which may, by the terms of it, exceed twenty-one years, is not applicable to the statute with respect to a trust for accumulation by deed, which may, by its terms, exceed the life of the settlor. The Court decided that it is applicable, and that the trust for the accumulation during the lives of A. and B. was good during the life of Lady Rosslyn, and bad only from the period of her death. It has always appeared to us singular, looking at the language of the statute, that any doubt should ever have been seriously entertained from the points arising in Griffiths v. Vere. The disabling part of the statute does not enact, that any settlement or will, expressing, in terms, a trust for excessive accumulation, shall be void, but personally disables the settlor or testator from effecting the excessive accumulation. "No person or persons shall, after the passing of this act, by any deed or deeds, surrender or surrenders, will, codicil, or otherwise howsoever, settle or dispose of any real or personal property, so and in such manner that the rents, issues, profits, or produce thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for any longer term than the life or lives of any such grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors, or the term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settlor, devisor, or testator." If the case stood on this part of the section alone, it might be thought that a direction to accumulate for more than the life of the grantor, or twenty-one years afterwards, would not, on the equity of the statute, be wholly void, but only to the extent to which the statute says a settlor shall not settle so as to accumulate. But the latter part of the clause seems framed expressly to prevent all doubt, by directing, "that, in every case where any accumulation shall be directed otherwise than as aforesaid, such directions shall be null and void, and the rents, issues, profits, and produce of such property so directed to be accumulated shall, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated, contrary to the provisions of this act, go to, and be received by, such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto if such accumulation had not been directed." Now, as the act expressly permits accumulation for one of two periods, namely, the life of the grantor, or twenty-one years afterwards, the clause above cited can only mean to direct the destination of the funds directed to be accumulated, for the excess beyond either of those periods; because the accumulations are only to go away from the persons designated, so long as they are directed to be accumulated contrary to the provisions of the statute; and so far as the direction operates to produce accumulation for either of the periods mentioned, it is not a direction to accumulate contrary to the provisions of the statute, and is excepted out of the latter part of the 1st section. Nevertheless, however clear the construction of a statute may appear, it is always satisfactory in practice that it should rest upon express authority, and that is now furnished by the case above referred to.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where several causes returned are inconsistent, the whole is bad. (Rex v. Cambridge, 2 T. R. 450; S. P., Rex v. York, 5 T. R. 66). It is inconsistent to state, in a return to a mandamus, (to certify the election of a recorder, supposed, in the writ, to be on the 15th January), that the corporation were not then duly assembled; and afterwards to state the election of another corporate officer, to wit, on the 15th January. The day in such case is material; and then its being laid under a videlicet does not make any difference. (Rex v. York, 5 T. R. 66). A return to such a mandamus, that the corporation were not duly assembled to proceed to the election of a recorder, is bad, because it contains a negative pregnant. Where the writ sets forth all the proceedings of the election, concluding "by reason whereof A. was elected," it is a bad return to say that he was not elected: the proper course would be for the defendant to traverse one of the facts alleged. (Ib.) The return must deny the substance of the writ, and not the words only, or it will be bad. A return to a mandamus to restore, that the prosecutor was not duly elected, admitted, and sworn, was held ill. (Rex v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 79). Repugnancy in a return will vitiate it; therefore a return which first admits an election, and then avoids it by stating that there was no election at all, is bad. (Rex v. Norwich, 2 Salk. 436; Reg. v. Old Hall Manor, 10 Adol. & Ell. 248). So will an argumentative return. (Rex v. Hereford, 6 Mod. 309; Rex v. Raines, 3 Salk. 233). To a mandamus to restore the under-schoolmaster of a grammar-school, a return that the party had never taken the oaths appointed to be taken without specifying them, is bad, for non constat they are illegal. (Rex v. Morpeth Bailiffs, 1 Str. 58). If a custom to remove ad libitum be returned by way of recital only, it will be bad. (Rex v. Coventry, 2 Salk. 430). It must appear positively. If the return do state that the party was summoned, it will be bad. (Rex v. Gaskin, 8 T. R. 209). So, where the return sets out the cause of a motion to be non-attendance at corporate meetings for the purpose of electing officers, it must be shewn that the attendance of the party amoved was requisite, and that he had a right to concur and take part in the election, and ought to have obeyed the summons, otherwise it will be bad. (Rex v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 168). To a mandamus to restore to the place of alderman, if the return do not set forth a total desertion from the place of which the party was amoved, it will be bad. (Rex v. The Corporation of Leicester, 4 Burr. 2087). It should appear upon the return that the body removing had proved the charge for which the member was removed: it is not sufficient to state merely that he was present when the charge was made, and did not deny it. (Rex v. Faversham, 8 T. R. 209). To a mandamus to swear in churchwardens, a return of lis pendens is bad, though accompanied with very special circumstances. (Rex v. Harris, 1 Bl. Rep. 430; S. C., 3 Burr. 1420). Where a charter of incorporation directed that those entitled to be burgesses should make application to the mayor and commonalty on a day certain in each year, and at no other time, and then make due and legal proof of their qualifications; and A. and B., claiming to be admitted burgesses, made application to the mayor and commonalty on the charter-day, and offered to make due and legal proof of their qualifications, but their applications were not heard nor proofs received, on account of the time having been spent in other business; a return to a mandamus to the mayor and commonalty to enter an adjournment to a subsequent day, to receive and examine the qualifications of the candidates, "that it was impossible for A. and B., before the expiration of the charter-day, to make due and legal proof, &c., according to the intent of the charter, by reason of the day being consumed in the necessary business of the borough, and that the mayor and commonalty were not authorised to hear such proof on any other day than the charter-day," &c., was held bad. (Rex v. Carmarthen, 1 M. & S. 697). To a mandamus to swear A. and B. churchwardens, non fuit debito modo elect is a bad return. (Reg. v. Twitty, 2 Salk. 433; Reg. v. Guise, 2 Lord Raym. 1008). So, a return to a mandamus commanding defendant to take upon himself the office of common-councilman of the borough of Leicester, "that, by a bye-law, persons refusing to fill that office are subject to a certain fine, and that defendant had paid the fine," was holden insufficient, because it omitted to state that the fine was in lieu of service. (Rex v. Bower, 1 B. & C. 585). So, a return stating an excuse for not complying with a peremptory writ of mandamus is bad and inadmissible, no return to a peremptory mandamus being under any circumstances receivable. (Reg. v. Poole, 1 G. & D. 728; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Ledgard, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 616). A return to a mandamus denying the matters of the writ with a protestando is ill. (Rex v. The Bristol Dock Company, 9 D. & R. 609; S. C., 6 B. & C. 181).

BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Bere; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

LAW BOOKS recently published by S. SWEET, 1, Chancery-lane; and V. and R. STEVENS & G. S. NORTON, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn and 194, Fleet-street.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with the subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the "Common-law Commissioners" suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develope. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on "Modern Pleading," as incident to the above "rules," and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy "reports." The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injurià in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. TO THE COUNTRY BOOKSELLERS.

THE LONDON LAW PUBLISHERS beg to inform those members of the Country Trade who have experienced any difficulty in obtaining Law Books from their Agents in London, upon the usual terms, that the fault thereof lies with their Agents. The same allowances, and the same facilities which have ever been given to the houses in Paternoster Row, are still offered to them, upon condition that the heads of those houses agree to observe and sign certain rules put forth by the Law Publishers for the protection of the retail trade and the suppression of underselling. The Country Bookseller has two modes at his command for removing the obstruction to his business, by not being able to obtain Law Books in the usual way and upon the usual terms. The first is—to apply direct to the Publishers for that portion of his orders which relates to Law: and the second is—to remove the whole of his correspondence to one of the few houses which have thought fit to recognise the Law Trade Rules, and keep the privilege of the full trade allowance upon Legal publications.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 10, 1849.

The decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in the case of Prince Albert v. Strange, has been affirmed by the Lord Chancellor, not only on the ground on which we understand his Honor to have proceeded, viz. the ground of there being such a right of property in the plaintiffs as to entitle them to prevent the publication of a catalogue of their works; but also on two grounds which we do not collect to have influenced the Vice-Chancellor, viz. the ground, as regards the particular catalogue referred to in the pleadings, of fraud in the defendants as against the public; and, as to the general question of publishing any catalogue, on the ground of fraud in the defendants in obtaining their information*. On the question of property, his Lordship did not go into any lengthened argument, but laid down the principle, as we collected it, thus:—That the author of literary compositions, or the like, has an undoubted property in them, which entitles him to withhold them from being made public; that when a person takes and makes public copies of such works, which, it is admitted, he may not do, he is but taking one mode of conveying to the public knowledge or information of the originals; and that, in publishing a descriptive catalogue, he is only taking another mode of conveying such knowledge or information to the public; that, in both cases, he is giving to the public a knowledge of the unpublished works of an author, which he has a right to withhold and keep for his own use and pleasure.

The principle laid down by this decision is very important, and may have some singular consequences. For although, in legal phraseology, the right established is expressed to be a right of property in a man's own works, it is impossible not to see that it is, in effect, a right of privacy—a right of withholding from the public a knowledge of what one has done in the way of literary or other composition. For when the Lord Chancellor speaks of the publication of a catalogue of works being a mode of conveying to the public knowledge of those works, his Lordship, we apprehend, does not, and cannot, mean that it makes the works themselves known, but only that it makes known the fact of their existence, and, generally, what is the subject-matter of them; and when his Lordship holds that there is no substantial distinction between the two acts—that of conveying knowledge by copies and conveying it by catalogues—his Lordship must, we apprehend, be understood to mean, not that there is no substantial distinction as to the nature of the knowledge or information, but none as to the interference with that which his Lordship holds to be the right of the author, namely, the right of withholding from the public not only his work, but all knowledge of or respecting it. The right, therefore, established by the decision of the Lord Chancellor, in Prince Albert v. Strange, is a right in the author of any composition capable of being made the subject of copyright, (if he has manifested an intention not to allow the public to have any knowledge of it), to restrain any person, whether affected or not by confidence, from publishing to the world any information whatever respecting such author's productions. Whether the Lord Chancellor meant to extend the doctrine to the making manifest to the public any other property of which the owner may desire to keep the knowledge to himself—with reference, for example, to such cases as those put by the Vice-Chancellor, of collections of gems, or the like—does not appear from the Lord Chancellor's judgment; but it seems difficult to see how the doctrine should not be applicable to the cases put by the Vice-Chancellor; and the result will be, that, if one has a collection of valuable or choice things of any kind, and manifests an intention of preventing the public from having any knowledge of them or their existence, it will be unlawful for any person, who, by the neglect of the owner or otherwise, may have had communicated to his senses the knowledge of their existence, to communicate that knowledge to the world. A material question, in any questions which will have to be considered with reference to this case, will be, what amounts to a dedication by an author to the public; because the foundation of the decision is, that the author desires that his work shall not be made public, and has done no act to make it public. In Prince Albert v. Strange, the plaintiffs had undoubtedly suffered their etchings to escape from perfect concealment—that is, they had entrusted them to a servant, (in confidence, it is true), and that servant had, by his neglect, allowed a stranger to obtain a sight of them. This, however, was not, under the circumstances, held to be a dedication to the public; principally, we apprehend, because the plaintiffs having alleged and sworn to circumstances shewing that the etchings could only have been obtained by surreptitious, viz. fraudulent means, the defendant did not specifically deny the allegation, and account for the mode in which the etchings had been obtained, but only averred in general terms his belief that they had been honestly obtained—an averment which obviously gave no information to the Court, and was no more than an expression of opinion, since, in the defendant's notion of honesty, it might be honest to obtain the etchings by surreptitious means.

But put the case, that the defendant had sworn distinctly that copies of the etchings had been shewn to him by a person of such station as to make it probable that he had a right to shew them, and with distinct liberty to make a catalogue of them; or put the case, that the plaintiff's servant had left the etchings exposed publicly in the street, so that any stranger passing by might see them and make a catalogue of them; would such a state of things amount to a dedication to the public sufficient to waive the right of concealment of the author, and let in the right of the percipient to use his senses, and acquire knowledge and use it? These and many other questions will arise, no doubt, in the cases that will follow the case of Prince Albert v. Strange; and, in the meantime, all that can be said is, that, where an author has not dedicated his works to the public, any other person will be restrained from communicating to the public, not only the works themselves, but the fact of their existence, and the particular designation of their mode of existence.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Frederick Peel, Esq., for the borough of Leominster, in the room of Henry Barkly, Esq., who has accepted the office of Governor of British Guiana.

ON THE PRIVILEGE TO RESIST PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS IN A SUIT IN EQUITY.

The recent litigation on the question, as to the extent of the privilege to refuse production of documents which are relevant to the subject-matter of a suit in equity, and in the possession or power of a defendant or witness, has been so frequent as to excite the surprise of one of the Vice-Chancellors in a case lately before him*.

It is true that certain general rules have been for a long time recognised to guide the practice on this subject, although of late their authority has been disputed; but the very nature of the question renders its application to each individual case a matter of some difficulty; and the existence of this difficulty concerning one of the commonest proceedings in Chancery practice may fully account for the number of cases that have lately occurred, without attributing any want of skill or knowledge to the counsel engaged.

The limits of the privilege depend upon the line to be drawn between two conflicting principles: one, of equity jurisprudence; the other, a principle of general expediency. Equity, on the one hand, assumes a right to enforce discovery, on oath, from the defendant in a suit, of all matters within his knowledge relevant to the plaintiff's case. On the other hand, it would often be very unjust, that a defendant should be compelled to produce, for the assistance of his opponent, his most confidential communications with his professional adviser, suggesting, and very possibly exaggerating, any defect of title or weak point in his case, for the very purpose of enabling his solicitor or counsel better to prepare a defence. Nor can it be maintained, that any principle of ethics makes such a discovery an obligation, where the opposite litigant, as is frequently the case, has no higher justice on his side than the defendant.

To every case that arises these two principles must be applied; and, unless the several branches of this Court observe some fixed rules for their guidance, the result will be contrary decisions, as one or the other principle weighs most with each individual judge†.

Until some cases just reported, the decisions on the question of privilege have carefully followed the rules recognised twenty years ago. We propose to state the general result of these cases, and the threatened deviation in the latest of them from the established law.

Supposing, then, that a defendant, in his answer, admits that documents relating to the subject-matter of the suit are in his possession or power, he may yet entitle himself, under certain circumstances, to refuse production of them. But in that case the plaintiff has, primâ facie, a right to move that they may be produced for his inspection; and it is incumbent on the defendant to shew some ground of privilege to prevent their production‡. The motion for production is made upon the statements in the answer; so that, strictly, the admissions of relevancy and possession should be distinct, or necessarily implied to entitle the plaintiff to move; and, on the other hand, the ground for resisting production must be accurately stated, either by the answer or by affidavits in support of it§, to enable the defendant successfully to oppose the motion.

The subject is most conveniently arranged under the following divisions:—

* See Pearse v. Pearse, (1 De G. & S. 31).

† See, as an illustration, Flight v. Robinson, (8 Beav. 36); Pearse v. Pearse, (1 De G. & S. 12).

‡ Per Cottenham, C., in Storey v. Lord G. Lennox, (1 My. & C. 535); Llewellyn v. Badeley, (1 Hare, 527).

§ Lord Walsingham v. Goodricke, (3 Hare, 122).

1. Where the documents are cases for the opinion of counsel, or confidential letters between the defendant and his solicitor, not containing legal advice or opinions.

2. Where they are the opinions of counsel, or letters to the defendant from his solicitor containing legal advice.

3. Where they are documents or deeds forming part of the defendant's title exclusively, and not supporting the plaintiff's title or the case made by his bill.

And 4. Where the defendant is himself a solicitor, and information of any kind, or documents, have come to his knowledge or into his possession, in that character, from any of his clients.

With respect to the first of these divisions, cases for counsel and confidential letters between the defendant and his solicitor are classed together, as documents of similar character, as regards the doctrine of privilege.

To entitle them to protection when they are relevant and in his possession, the defendant must aver distinctly that the cases were submitted to counsel, and the letters written, in contemplation of the existing suit, (or of an action which that suit seeks to aid or defend by discovery, and which is, therefore, part of the same litigation), *and with reference thereto.

He must also state that the letters were written, in confidence†, to his solicitor in that character‡.

Or the defendant must affirm that the cases were submitted, and confidential communications with his solicitor passed, after the dispute which occasioned the existing suit had arisen§, or after the actual commencement of the suit‖.

Protection was given on one occasion¶, where the answer stated, that the cases and communications with the defendant's solicitor passed after litigation commenced, or in contemplation of litigation, on the same subject, with other persons, with a view of asserting the same right, and denied expressly that the cases and communications passed before the dispute arose between the parties to the existing suit. This decision was approved by Vice-Chancellor Wigram—a great authority on this subject—without noticing in his statement of it the denial that the cases and communications passed before the dispute which occasioned the existing suit. According to his view of the case, therefore, it would have carried the doctrine of privilege farther than preceding decisions with respect to documents of the nature now under consideration.

A larger protection seems to be granted to the second class of documents we have mentioned, viz. opinions of counsel and letters to the defendant from his solicitor containing legal advice.

It seems, that if the defendant state in his answer, that the documents are of this description, and that they contain advice with reference to the very subject-matter of the suit, their nature alone will entitle the opinions and letters to protection, independently of the time when, and the circumstances under which, they were obtained, and where mere cases, and letters containing only statements of facts, would not be privileged*.

In Radcliffe v. Fursman†, the House of Lords decided, that the opinion of counsel upon a case was privileged when the case itself was not, neither the case nor opinion appearing to have been submitted or obtained in contemplation of any suit then threatened. The authority of this decision, as to the privilege of the opinion, has been recognised by Lord Brougham ‡ and Vice-Chancellor Wigram §, though both seemed to wish to extend the privilege, under like circumstances, to the case as well as the opinion.

The third ground of privilege is still on account of the nature of the documents required to be produced, viz. where they support exclusively the defendant's title.

To protect documents of this nature, the defendant should state positively‖ in his answer, that the documents or deeds in question form part of his title exclusively¶, *and do not form part of the plaintiff's title, and that they do not support, by evidence or otherwise, the case made by the bill††.

If the defendant is able to make these averments, the documents or deeds will be privileged, for the obvious reason that, under such circumstances, the plaintiff is only seeking to obtain discovery of matters that in no way concern him, and which, if produced, would not assist his case.

But if the defendant set out in his answer an abstract of documents or deeds, which would otherwise be entitled to privilege, and then make profert of them in the words, "as by the said deeds, &c., to which, for greater certainty, the defendant craves leave to refer, when produced, will appear," or in words to that effect, he deprives himself of his right to claim the privilege, because, by this manner of pleading, he has made the deeds or documents part of his answer, and the plaintiff has a right to see that they are correctly stated ‡‡.

The fourth occasion for the protection of documents and communications is on account of the professional character of the person from whom discovery is sought.

The privilege is much more extensive where discovery is sought from a defendant or a witness, being himself a solicitor, of information of any kind, or documents that have come to his knowledge or into his possession, in his professional character, from any of his clients.

All such matters are considered to be in his knowledge or possession as though sub sigillo confessionis. When a solicitor is a defendant in a suit, his clients have a right to expect that he shall not, in matters relating to himself, make a discovery of what has been confided to him by them in professional confidence.

When he is examined as a witness, a discovery of all communications (not within the preceding rules as to privilege) between himself and any clients, defendants in the suit, may be obtained from him; and professional communications with other persons, strangers to the suit, are certainly not proper subjects of discovery in equity.

The distinction between the cases in which discovery is sought from a lay defendant, of communications with his solicitor, and those in which a discovery of professional communications is required from a defendant or witness, himself a solicitor, seems based upon a broad principle of equity; and the observations of some Chancery judges, who would abolish this distinction, by granting the larger privilege in both the supposed cases, because they see no difference between these cases in principle, must be read with some surprise.

As the law on this subject stands at present, a defendant or witness may entitle his client's communications to privilege, by stating that he is a solicitor, and that the matters of which discovery is sought came to his possession, or were received or written by him, professionally in his character of confidential solicitor *, and that the communications were made in confidence †.

And protection is afforded, although the connexion between the solicitor and his client has come to an end since the communications passed ‡.

Such is the result of the recent decisions on the question of privilege. In all of them the general rules have been followed, with but two exceptions.

In Reece v. Trye §, before the Master of the Rolls, cases for the opinion of counsel, as well as the opinions, were privileged, though not prepared in contemplation of a suit. And in Pearse v. Pearse ||, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce could not help indulging to some extent the strong inclination he expressed to extend protection to matters not within the rules above stated.

On some future occasion it may be useful to examine the grounds upon which the different decisions are rested; at present it is enough to state shortly, that the Lord Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor of England seem disposed to support the old practice; Vice-Chancellor Wigram ¶ and Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce are inclined to extend the privilege; while, on the other hand, the Master of the Rolls†† would enforce discovery in all cases. E. E. K.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Christopher Hicks the younger, of Shrewsbury; John Banfield, of Saint Mary's, Scilly, Cornwall; Joseph Wright, of Doncaster; William Roby, of Liverpool.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, has appointed Frederick Charsley, Gent., of Amersham, Buckinghamshire, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Buckingham.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 17, 1849.

The case of Cox v. The Midland Railway Company (13 Jur. 65) has excited discussion within and beyond the circle of the Legal Profession. The decision is, undoubtedly, one of great importance, affecting the safety of the public and the liabilities of railway companies.

We agree with those who maintain that the rules of law should, where it is possible, be moulded so as to meet the exigences of the times, and the new relations which may be created between man and man by altered circumstances of a general and widely influential character; but we think that this was not a case for the determination of which it was necessary to adopt such a course.

The point for consideration was, whether, if a person has been injured through the negligence of a servant of the Company, the superintendent of the traffic department could bind the Company for the payment of the medical man employed to attend the injured person by such superintendent?

It was, therefore, the simple case of principal and agent, of master and servant; and the law which governs those relations was the law to be administered on this occasion. It makes no difference, in this respect, whether the principal be a corporation, a company, or an individual.

The civil liability of a master for the contract of his servant is clearly founded upon the express or implied authority of the master for the making of the contract; and such authority must be proved by direct evidence, or by circumstances whence it may be inferred by the jury. In the instance of a special agent—e. g. the superintendent of the traffic department of a railway—he is ex officio invested only with limited powers, and it is the duty of those who deal with him, as an agent, to ascertain the extent of his authority. If they do not take this precaution, they contract with him at their peril, and must bear any consequent loss.

It is true that this was a case of urgent necessity. There was no time to learn the will of the principal. It was the natural and moral duty of the superintendent not to hesitate in sending for a medical assistant to attend the wounded man; but there was no legal obligation imposed upon him to do so; neither would there have been on the Company or its directors, had they been present. As far as regards the urgency of the case, it was governed by the decision of the Exchequer in Hawtayne v. Bourne, (7 Mee. & W. 595), recognised and acted upon in Ricketts v. Bennett, (17 Law Journ., N. S., C. P., 17). There, a resident agent was appointed by the directors of a mining company to manage the mine; warrants of distress were about to be enforced against the machinery in the mine, whereby it would probably have been flooded by water; and, in order to prevent the seizure, he borrowed the money, and paid it in satisfaction of the debts. It was held, that he had no implied authority from the shareholders to do this. Baron Parke there said—"The law provides for that which is common, not for that which is unusual." And the question in such cases appears to be, what is the authority of the agent in ordinary circumstances? as such is the authority supposed to have been contemplated by the principal when he appointed a delegate for particular purposes. It has also been decided, that a Master is not impliedly liable for medical attendance upon his own servant, who has met with an accident in his service; (Wennal v. Adney, 3 B. & P. 247; Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 153); and it would, therefore, be difficult to hold, that a master should be impliedly liable for such attendance procured by his servant for a third party.

The Court, in the principal case, seem to have considered that this class of railway servants have no more authority to bind the company than is possessed by a coachman to bind the proprietor of a coach. They also appeared to be of opinion, that, to hold such a contract binding on the company, would be to allow the servant to decide whether the company were liable for the injury. There would probably, therefore, have been danger in extending the doctrine of implied liabilities (which in themselves are dangerous) to this case; and the Court of Exchequer were warranted in arriving at their conclusion, both upon principle and by the force of analogous decisions. Still it cannot, we think, be denied that the law requires amendment in this respect. The medical profession have earned an honourable renown for humanity, and are in general, we believe, actuated by high motives in the discharge of their duties. There must, however, be many amongst them who would object to leaving their home and immediate business to take a long journey and attend upon a poor man unable to remunerate them for their services. A medical man should not be subjected to the loss, nor a man who has met with an accident to the danger of being deprived of assistance. In the case we have been considering, it was deemed requisite to have the services of an eminent surgeon; and Mr. Cox (who bears that character) had to travel at night forty miles to the patient.

If the Company are liable for the accident, they are liable to the sufferer for the expenses of his medical attendant. Since Lord Campbell's Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), it is to their pecuniary interest that the man injured by them should not die. It is only, therefore, when the accident is not caused by them, (cases which are very rare, and not to be determined with certainty at the time of their occurrence), that they might suffer loss, in a pecuniary sense, by being liable in the first instance for medical expenses.

Looking at all the incidents of the question, the safety of the public, and the requirements of common humanity, we think that railway companies should at once declare, that they will be liable in the first instance for all expenses reasonably incurred on behalf of persons who have been injured on their line of railway, but that such liability shall be no admission of their liability for the accident; and that, if the accident has occurred through the party's own negligence or wilfulness, he shall reimburse the company the expenses. If such a resolution be not come to by the companies themselves, we trust that the Legislature will exert its compulsory powers for this object.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, has appointed George Cutler Parker, Gent., of Wrexham, Denbighshire, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Denbigh, also in and for the county of Flint.

JUST PUBLISHED,
MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES.
In 4 vols. 8vo., price 4*l.* 4*s.* cloth,
(Dedicated, by permission, to her Majesty the Queen),

NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND, in which are interwoven, under a new and original arrangement of the general subject, all such parts of the work of BLACKSTONE as are applicable to the present times; together with full but compendious expositions of the modern improvements of the law up to May, 1848; the original and adopted materials being throughout the work typographically distinguished from each other. By HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant at Law. Second Edition. Prepared for the Press by JAMES STEPHEN, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The correction of the Work in reference to the new Statutes and Cases (which are brought down to May, 1848), and the revision of the press in general, have been confided by the author to his son; his own retirement from professional practice, and the transfer of his attention to official duties, rendering him less competent than formerly to labours of that description. But the sheets have been invariably laid before him during the progress of the printing, and he feels himself able to vouch for their accuracy."—Extract from the Author's Advertisement to the present Edition.

"Taking the book" (Stephen) "as a whole, it is the best commentary on a great subject we ever read. Whatever in the former book" (Blackstone) "was important is fully retained and further explained,—what is immaterial is passed by,—what was confused and intricate is made plain,—what was illogical is reduced to reason,—and what was chaotic to order. The student will reap a rich harvest of knowledge from these volumes; we recommend every member of the Profession, be he young or old in it, to read them."—Law Magazine.

"This work, now that it has been carried out to the fullest extent, and all the volumes been simultaneously put forth to the world in one entire edition, (itself considerably altered by correction and revision from the first), challenges comparison not only with what may be termed 'other editions of Blackstone,' but with Blackstone itself."—The Times.

"We must frankly say, preferring upon the whole Serjeant Stephen's writing to Blackstone's, that we think the book before us a somewhat better book than Blackstone's would have been, could that learned judge have survived, with his likings and dislikings, to write in our day. It is a monument of conscientious labour, of diligent and scrupulous care, and of acute professional learning, with a wider scope and range than is common in Westminster Hall."—The Examiner.

"We are proud to recognise the merits of a performance which we think will redound to the credit of the authors, while it is eminently calculated to accomplish a destiny which has been hitherto denied to all new 'Blackstones,'—that, namely, of superseding the old one."—The Morning Chronicle.

"The attempt, we repeat, has been eminently and deservedly successful: for Serjeant Stephen has produced a work which need not fear any comparison which can be made between it and its predecessor, (Blackstone's Commentaries), either with respect to style, learning, or general accuracy; whilst, we are bound to say, in the philosophical arrangement of the general subject, it is decidedly superior."—The Morning Post.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 24, 1849.

It has been recently held, on more than one occasion, in the case of companies formed for the purpose of making and working railways, and not having proceeded to completion and actual transaction of business, that such companies are not within the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act of 1848. We apprehend that a contrary decision will ultimately prevail; and we will shortly state our reasons for that conclusion. The act commences by reciting the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, must be collected to have been intended to apply exclusively to trading companies; but to companies constituted for trading purposes, not merely to companies which have actually traded. The words of the 1st section are, "If any commercial or trading company now, or at any time hereafter, incorporated by charter or act of Parliament; or any company or body of persons now, or at any time hereafter, associated together for any commercial or trading purposes, and to which any privilege or privileges &c.; or any company or body of persons now, or at any time hereafter, associated together for any commercial or trading purposes, and registered either provisionally or completely &c., shall commit any act" &c.

It is needless to say that the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, relates exclusively to railway companies. Then what the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act applies to is, among others, all companies within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, including all companies which shall have obtained or shall obtain a certificate of registration, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110—all companies which, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, have become bankrupt—and, lastly, all companies, associations, and partnerships, to be formed after the passing of the act, whose shares shall be transferable without consent.

As to companies which have been formed since the passing of the act, there can, at least, be no doubt that railway companies are included within it, if only their shares are transferable without consent; neither can there be any doubt as to railway companies which have registered under the 7 & Vict. c. 110; and that railway companies may bring themselves within that act appears by the 9th section. But with regard to railway companies which have not brought themselves within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, the material question is, are they trading companies, or are they, at any rate, within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111? Now, by the 8 Vict. c. 20, (the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act), all railway companies, unless their special acts are to the contrary, are empowered to carry goods and passengers for hire—in other words, are empowered to become common carriers; and by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 10, carriers are traders within the meaning of the bankrupt law. Therefore, railway companies, unless by their special acts it is otherwise provided, are by the Legislature constituted traders.

If the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, confined the companies that come within it to trading companies, possibly it might be contended, that companies intended for trading, but not having actually begun business, are not trading companies within the meaning of the act; though even then it might be open to contend, that what the act means by a trading company, is a company constituted for trading. But the act does not so limit itself; it includes expressly companies or bodies of persons associated together for commercial or trading purposes, if those companies shall have registered either provisionally or completely.

Now, can there be any doubt, that embryo railway companies are companies or bodies of persons associated for commercial or trading purposes? Unquestionably, they are not bodies associated for purposes of mere amusement, or for mere intellectual, or moral, or charitable purposes. They are bodies of persons associated for making roads of a particular kind—for running on those roads carriages of a particular kind, or drawn by a particular kind of power; but all their arrangements tend to the one purpose, of conveying passengers and goods, and making and receiving certain charges therefrom; that is, of carrying on the commerce or trade of carriers for hire. It is possible, of course, that a company may just have contrived to avoid doing any of the things which would bring it within any of the acts referred to; but we apprehend, that if a railway company has been actually incorporated, and has actually carried for hire; or if it has, without being actually incorporated or without having commenced business, been registered, either provisionally or completely, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, it is within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111; and, being within that act, it is within the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act.

Review.

A Letter to Lord Denman, &c., on the Enactments conferring Jurisdiction upon Commissions to try legal Rights, &c. By G. Wingrove Cooke, Esq., Barrister at Law. Stevens & Norton. 1849. Pp. 16.

Of this pamphlet may be said, as once was said by a judge of a certain text-book, "It is a little book, but it is none the worse for that." Mr. Cooke is, if we recollect right, the author of a work on a political subject, not unmarked by what is termed, in party language, liberalism of sentiment. He is also, and has been for many years, a legal officer under a Whig commission. He will not, therefore, be suspected of any anti-liberal sentiments tending to make him look with distate either on the works or the maxims of law reformers; though, undoubtedly, if any lawyer, but one known as of the law-reform party, had said half the bitter truths—the more bitter because said in the quietest possible manner—that Mr. Cooke has here said of the works and maxims of law reformers, or rather of talkers on law reform, he would be suspected at once of incivisme, and declared to be of the "every-thing-as-it-should-be" school. Mr. Cooke is obviously a man of business, and an earnest man, writing what he thinks, on a subject with which he is practically acquainted. This pamphlet is, as he himself describes it, not an attack on a particular act of Parliament, but an attack on that meddling, officious, and dogmatic legislation, which, proceeding on the maxim that technicalities are odious, mistakes looseness for simplicity; and, under the pretence of adapting tribunals to men's special wants, indulges in reality a morbid craving for the excitement of invention. Mr. Cooke's criticisms are more specially directed to defects in the Tithe Act, with the working of which he is minutely acquainted by long practice under it as an Assistant Tithe Commissioner; but the gist of his observations goes to this—that whenever the Legislature, in the exercise of its law reforming tendencies, devises an extensive scheme of law reform, such as that involved in the Tithe Commutation Act, the Enfrachisement of Copyhold intended Acts, the Inclosure Commission, &c., it schemes for each a new machinery, instead of improving the machinery of former acts, preserving as much of the procedure and practice as possible. To use Mr. Cooke's own words:—

"I have shewn that in the two most recent instances 'in which it has been thought necessary to arm a commission with judicial powers, the machinery invented 'for the purpose has been far from perfect. I have 'shewn, also, that, instead of profiting by experience to 'improve upon the first invention, the second essay has 'been altogether different from, and infinitely less work-'manlike than, the first.

"If ever we shall have a compulsory enfranchisement of copyholds, it will probably be found necessary to give the commissioners a jurisdiction to try 'questions of manorial customs, and this jurisdiction 'will probably be thought to require a provision for 'appeal. If the present course of legislation is persisted 'in, a third system of trial by assistant commissioners, 'and appeal by feigned issue, will then be invented, 'and the third invention will, perhaps, be even worse 'than the second. The Tithe Commission has its particular course of trial and appeal; the Inclosure Commission has its peculiar course of trial and appeal; the 'Copyhold Commission will have its peculiar course of 'trial and appeal; and if, as it is not improbable, other 'great reforms shall be resolved upon by our national 'councils, and carried out by commissions, we may, 'perhaps, see half-a-dozen different novel judicatures, 'all trying not very dissimilar classes of private rights, 'but all operating with very dissimilar powers, and each 'having a separate and not very well understood course 'of practice. Your Lordship is too well aware of the 'litigation which invariably follows any considerable 'alteration in the old forms of judicial proceedings, and 'of the expense which suitors must bear in obtaining 'the decisions which eventually consolidate the new 'practice, to render it necessary that I should insist 'upon the practical injustice which these executive 'tribunals must, notwithstanding all the exertions to 'the contrary, produce."

On the subject of what Mr. Cooke correctly terms an ignorant terror of technicalities, he refers to two defects found in practice to exist in the Tithe Commutation Act. He says—

"The first was the great difficulty in ascertaining the 'exact point to be decided. It was early held by the 'Courts that the decision must be in the terms of the 'claim, and it was afterwards held—although, as these 'proceedings commonly took place before the judges at 'chambers, the legal assistants had small opportunity 'of knowing what the actual practice was—that the 'issue must be in the terms of the decision. The claim, 'therefore, made at the commencement of the proceedings was properly the issue afterwards tried. But this 'claim was commonly a loose, inartificial statement, 'altogether insufficient upon the face of it. The assistant commissioner for special purposes had then one of 'four courses to choose: to take the claim as it was 'made; to draw the claim himself; to give the claimant 'leave to put in a formal claim after the case had been 'heard; or to decline to proceed until a good written 'claim had been put in.

"Each of these courses had its inconvenience. To 'decide the insufficient claim was to put the parties 'to all the expense of proceeding to the point of 'settling the issue, and to subject them to be then sent 'back to the commission to make a valid claim and 're-try the case. This occurred more than once in our 'early practice, and in one case the costs of the party, 'who was successful both before the commission and at 'the trial, amounted to 1245*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, chiefly because 'his first claim had been badly drawn. If the commissioner undertook to draw the claim, he placed 'himself in a false position; he could not know the 'evidence which was to support the case, and he subjected himself to be afterwards told by the parties that 'he had made for them a claim which they had never 'intended to put forward. To reserve leave to make a 'formal claim after the case had been concluded was 'not unreasonably objected to by the respondents,—it 'deprived them of all accurate information as to the 'case they had to meet. The last, which was the most 'obvious course, was found scarcely possible in practice. 'It was adopted as far as possible, but it left the com-'missioner at the mercy of every claimant. A man 'who claims an exemption is usually in the present 'enjoyment of it. His interest is to delay all inquiry 'into its validity, and as the commission had no express 'authority to exact a written claim within a limited 'time, or, indeed, to exact a written claim at all, it was 'found in practice that to insist upon valid written 'claims from a dilatory claimant gave him an oppor-'tunity to stop the commutation for an almost inde-'finite period.

"The act was deficient in not prescribing some simple 'form of pleading before the commission.

"Again, although a claim might be bad upon the face 'of it—although it might be to take the sixtieth sheaf 'instead of the tenth, the decision of the commissioner 'must still send the fact, as well as the law, to the 'assizes. If the tithe-owner would admit the imme-'morial usage, a special case might indeed be stated; 'but this, in my experience, has never once happened. 'The consequence has been, that the existence of the 'custom, in fact, had first to be proved upon the feigned 'issue, and that the judge at Nisi Prius, after this per-'haps unnecessary expense had been incurred, reserved 'the point of law for the opinion of the Court in banco.

"A simple form of pleading would have allowed the 'tithe-owner to object to the claim, that it was not good 'in law, and the decision of the assistant commissioner 'upon this demurrer would have gone to the Court at 'once, and the expense would have been inconsiderable.

"It is mortifying to reflect how much good might 'have been effected by so simple a provision. In the 'early career of the commission, all the disputed points 'of tithe law would have been carried up to the courts 'at an expense hardly exceeding that of a tithe meeting 'in the parish. These points would all have received 'authoritative decisions, and the legal assistants would 'have trod confidently and consistently by their light.

"It is, I fear, a fault of modern legislators to encourage 'an ignorant terror of technicalities. Because they can-'not distinguish between those that are necessary and 'those that are useless, they abolish all. The same 'men who repeat from Archbishop Whateley, that half 'the disputes of the world arise from bad definitions, 'seem to think it unnecessary that, when two parties 'come before a tribunal, the point in dispute between 'them should be clearly stated."

We have cited enough to shew the views taken by Mr. Cooke on the subject of two principal defects in our law reform legislation, as applied to the carrying into effect alterations in the tenure of property by commission; and we may add, that we thoroughly approve those views, and join Mr. Cooke in the hope that some legislator, of sufficient weight as well as knowledge, will press on the Legislature the subject of consolidating the procedure and practice of commissions, in, at least, all those subjects which involve the same kinds of inquiries, and of not being afraid to apply to the machinery of such commission precision in the forms of proceeding, or what may, in fact, be termed the pleadings, even although such precision should be open, at the hands of the ignorant and wordy, to the imputation of technicality.

COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND, by Sir WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, Knt. The Twenty-second Edition. Edited by JAMES STEWART, Esq., Barrister at Law.

The peculiar features of this edition are as follow:—

1. The whole of the original text of Blackstone is preserved, after a collation with the best editions; and the original authorities have been carefully examined and verified.

2. The alterations in the law by statute and decision are incorporated into the text.

3. The arrangement of Blackstone's Commentaries is preserved, and reference is made in the side margin to the original paging; thus giving an easy mode of referring to any previous edition.

"Mr. Stewart, by incorporating the alterations of the laws with the text of Blackstone, and in all other respects leaving his original unaltered, has succeeded in making it a clear and uniform statement of the law at the present day; while it preserves all the merit and authority which belong to its illustrious author. Mr. Stewart throughout admirably preserves the character of the book, as an elementary work designed to give one clear definite impression to a person previously unacquainted with the subject. We are, therefore, not at all surprised to learn, that, notwithstanding the numerous editions of Blackstone published, a complete Second Edition of Mr. Stewart's work has now been called for. At a time when both legal and general education is occupying the public attention to an unprecedented degree, Mr. Stewart's work is peculiarly fitted to aid the Inns of Court in their exertions to promote the study of the law, and to supply the Universities with a class-book in carrying out the system of more extended education. In concluding our notice of this, the First Volume, (the last of the Second Edition), we must not omit to say, that, though Mr. Stewart had in this part of his work to write much calculated to provoke the controversial spirit, he has, nevertheless, rigidly abstained from offering any political opinions of his own, and steadily pursued the aim he set out with—to present the professional student and the gentleman of liberal education with the clearest and completest analytical view of the Law and the Constitution. We have only to add, that we think Mr. Stewart has been completely successful in attaining his end." See The Standard, Feb. 19, 1849.

LONDON, MARCH 3, 1849.

In a very recent case (Skarff v. Soulby, 13 Jur. 89) the question of the extent to which a man must be indebted in order to make a voluntary settlement void against creditors, was discussed; and it is to be gathered, that, in the opinion of the Court, it is not necessary to shew that a party is indebted to the extent of insolvency—it is enough to prove that he was indebted. The cases on this subject are not very precise in their language; perhaps it would be difficult judicially to lay down any precise rule: but a principle may be collected from them, and we shall endeavour to shew what that principle is.

In Townsend v. Westacott (2 Beav. 340) it was contended on the one side, that, if a man is indebted at all when he makes a voluntary settlement, the deed is bad against creditors; this principle the Court wholly repudiated. It was contended on the other side, that a party must be shewn to have been indebted to the extent of actual insolvency; and this principle the Court also repudiated, but the Court did not lay down any positive rule. The facts were, that the settlor was, at the time of making the settlement, largely indebted, and in less than three years afterwards he became insolvent, and there was no satisfactory evidence as to what was the actual state of his property at the time of the settlement. No decree, except a mere decree for inquiries, was made, because the existence of the settlor's debts was not sufficiently put in issue. In Richardson v. Smallwood (Jac. 552) it was held, that it is not necessary to prove the party actually insolvent. The decision was not, on the other hand, put on the ground that it is sufficient to shew he was simply indebted, but on this—that it is to be collected from the circumstances, whether the party made the deed to hinder and delay his creditors. In that case it was proved, that the settlor was indebted, not to the extent of actual insolvency, but, as it is termed in the judgment, he was distressed at the time, and no motive could be shewn for the deed, but the apprehension that, in default of it, his property would go to his creditors. The statute, (13 Eliz. c. 5), it will be recollected, does not speak at all of the grantor being indebted or not, but avoids fraudulent deeds, which have been made of malice, &c., or to the end, purpose, and intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors or others of their just and lawful actions, &c. The question, therefore, indebted or not, and to what extent indebted, is material only as evidence of the intention with which the deed was made. The language of Lord Hardwicke, in Townshend v. Windham, (2 Ves. sen. 1), certainly would go the length of taking the mere fact of being indebted at the time, as the test of the deed being good or not. "I know no case," he says, "on the 13 Eliz., where a man, indebted at the time, makes a mere voluntary conveyance to a child without consideration, and dies indebted, but that it shall be considered as part of his estate for the benefit of his creditors." But then his Lordship explains, in a subsequent passage, what he means, when he says, "A man actually indebted, and conveying voluntarily, always means to be in fraud of creditors, as I take it." So that Lord Hardwicke looks at the fact of being indebted as the evidence that the deed was made with intent to hinder. Now, Lord Hardwicke could not have meant to say, that, if a man possessed of an estate worth 20,000*l.*, owes 5000*l.*, and then settles voluntarily 5000*l.*, leaving 10,000*l.* clear, his being indebted in 5000*l.*, and having 15,000*l.* to pay it with, is evidence of the settlement being with an intent to hinder creditors. His Lordship must have meant by indebted, indebted to that extent, that, in the language of Richardson v. Smallwood, a state of distress, or that state of circumstances, exists, in which a man must be supposed not to denude himself of property without incurring visible risk of hindering creditors, if his deed should stand good. If that were not so, it would be scarcely possible for a man, in any state of circumstances, ever to make a valid voluntary settlement; for, as observed by Lord Langdale, in Townsend v. Westacott, (2 Beav. 344), "There is scarcely a man who can avoid being indebted to some amount. He may intend to pay every debt as soon as it is contracted, and constantly use his best endeavours, and have ample means to do so, and yet may be frequently, if not always, indebted in some small sum." In all the cases, we believe, before Skarff v. Soulby, in which a voluntary settlement has been set aside, the settlor has been considerably indebted—indebted to that extent, that great doubt of his actual or continuing solvency must have been imputed to him; and the doctrine, that being merely indebted will avoid a deed, is rather the result of dictum than of decision. In Richardson v. Smallwood there had been a continuing state of debt for a long time. So, in Whittington v. Jennings (6 Sim. 493); and in Lord Townshend v. Windham, it must be collected that the settlor was largely indebted, and it does not appear that he had any considerable means of providing for his debts, except the very estate conveyed. The doctrine laid down in Kidney v. Coussmaker, (12 Ves. 136), that a voluntary settlement is only void as against creditors who were creditors at the time, qualified as it has been by subsequent cases, to this extent, that the deed can only be set aside at the instance of persons who were creditors at the time, (see Ede v. Knowles, 2 You. & C. 178), supports the view that we are taking, that what the Court looks for is proof that the settlor was so indebted, that an inference arises in favour of his having settled his property with a view to delay creditors—an inference which justly arises, where it is found that, in fact, the debts which existed at the time of the settlement have not been paid since, but which does not justly arise if the debts which then existed have been paid in due course. We conceive, on the whole, that the true principle to be collected from the cases is this—that, in order to set aside a voluntary settlement under the 13 Eliz., it must be shewn that the settlor was at the time in such circumstances that inability to pay his debts was actually existent, or reasonably to be apprehended by him, so that a presumption arises that the settlement was made with intent to hinder creditors; that indebted or not indebted, and the extent to which the settlor was indebted, are merely evidence from which the Court will conclude that such a presumption arises; and that a trifling debt, due at the time of the settlement, and remaining unpaid, if it were shewn that at the time of the settlement the settlor was abundantly solvent, would not be sufficient to set aside the deed.

PRESENT STATE OF THE LAW OF JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES, COMPLETELY REGISTERED UNDER THE STATUTE 7 & 8 VICT. c. 110.

Until lately it was supposed, that, since as before the passing of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110), all companies, whatever might be the number of the members or partners, and of whatever nature or extent might be the object undertaken, which were not incorporated by act of Parliament or by royal charter, or privileged by letters-patent, (under 1 Vict. c. 73), were in law, as regarded the mode in which they should incur liabilities to the public, and the extent to which the funds of the individual members (within certain limits, relating to the direction of such liabilities) should be affected, not materially different from ordinary partnerships, consisting of two or three partners, and undertaken for private purposes. It now appears, however, from some recent decisions, that a company, completely registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, may, by its agent, acting in the most regular way of ordinary business, incur the heaviest liabilities, and yet, provided they can shew that the acts of their agent, who has been so acting for them in the face of the world, are not in strict conformity with the authority given by their deed of settlement, may be able to set up that act as a defence against being compelled to meet them.

In the cases of Ridley v. The Plymouth Grinding Company, and The King's Bridge Flour-mill Company v. The Same, (12 Jur. 542, 545), in the Court of Exchequer, at the Sittings in Banc after Trinity Term, 1848, it was, among other points of importance, decided, that in an action against a joint-stock company, completely registered under the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, on a contract made in their name, the deed constituting the company, a copy of which has been delivered to the registrar on complete registration, is receivable in evidence, to shew what persons have power to act for the company; and that where, by the terms of such deed, the management of the company is committed to a board of eleven directors, (five of whom are to be a quorum for the dispatch of business), the acts of the board are not evidence to bind the company, unless it be shewn that at least five directors were present. In the same cases it was held, that a contract, entered into by such company, without all the formalities required by the 44th section of the act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, may be enforced against the company, though not by them. It does not seem very easy to reconcile these two decisions, or to reconcile the former of them with the act in question. The result, however, is, that (unless it should be held that all contracts, having the requisites enumerated in the 44th section, shall be valid and effectual) the only safe mode of dealing with such companies will be to inspect first their deed of settlement. This proceeding would be attended with such a degree of trouble, expense, and loss of time, that, in the recent case of Smith and Others v. The Hull Glass Company, at the Nisi Prius Sittings at Guildhall, on the 11th November last, Mr. Justice Cresswell, in charging the jury, (the above-mentioned case of Ridley v. The Plymouth Grinding Company having been cited to him), said, "There is a new mode of constituting joint-stock companies. The results of this case will make such companies rather worse than better off than they were before. It will now be very difficult to make a contract with any joint-stock company, except with ready money."

In the case cited above, (Smith and Others v. The Hull Glass Company), the action was brought to recover 177*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, in respect of a quantity of zafres, a species of unrefined ore of cobalt glass, used in the manufacture of coloured glass, supplied to the defendants by the plaintiffs' agents at Hull. The working manager of the defendants gave certain orders to the agents, in pursuance of which the goods were removed from the docks, and delivered to the defendants. The elder of the Messrs. F., the agents, was then chairman of the Hull Glass Company; and both he and his son were shareholders, also, to a considerable extent. In November, 1847, the Messrs. F. failed, and at that time both of them were in arrears to the company for calls upon their shares, the elder of them to the amount of 2033*l.* odd. On the part of the plaintiffs it was sought to be established, that the Messrs. F., acting as their agents, had disposed of the goods in question to the defendants. It was contended, on the other hand, on behalf of the defendants, that they, the defendants, had had this transaction with the Messrs. F. alone, whom they treated as principals, and disclaimed any dealing with the plaintiffs. It was proved, however, that Mr. S., the defendants' working manager, had ordered the goods; that the company had never paid for them to Messrs. F.; and that the secretary of the defendants had held a correspondence with the plaintiffs themselves, clearly shewing, in its terms, that he considered the goods to have been purchased of them. Mr. F. the elder underwent a long cross-examination, with the view of establishing, on the part of the defence, that he had, as chairman of the company, burned or destroyed some of the correspondence relating to the transaction; but he strongly denied all recollection of his having done so. He was also asked, if he had not taken the invoices off the company's file relating to this transaction, and burned them; but this, too, he denied. He admitted, however, that he had taken the invoices relating to the goods in question off the file, and substituted others; but he explained that act in this way:—The goods in question were originally invoiced in his name; and he directed a clerk in the company's office, now the secretary, to substitute other invoices, in which they were invoiced to the present plaintiffs. At the time he substituted the invoices he was chairman of the company; and he also caused a corresponding alteration to be made in the company's books. This alteration and substitution, he said, he made, just in order to put the transaction in its proper position, he and his partner having only held the goods in question in transitu, and disposed of them as agents of the plaintiffs.

Byles, Serjt., for the defendants, contended, that the plaintiffs had not shewn that the defendants had promised, or were indebted; they had not shewn the company was indebted. There was no evidence whatever to shew that the numerous parties who did or might compose the company were liable. (Ridley v. The Plymouth and Stonehouse Baking Company, 17 Law Journ., N.S., 252).

Talfourd, Serjt.—There was evidence that the company, by their officer, (Mr. Stinger), ordered the goods.

CRESSWELL, J., (to Talfourd, Serjt.)—There was nothing to shew that Stinger had any authority to give the orders. You have got an admission under the hand of some individual. What authority had he to make an admission? Had he an authority to make an admission for the company? You are suing something which is the creation of an act of Parliament; and that act of Parliament describes the mode in which the business shall be conducted by a body so constituted, and then of the authority which shall be necessary to bind the different integral parts of that body. Your judgment against the company in this action would bind all the shareholders in it. It is right that the shareholders should not be bound by an action against the company, unless it is in conformity with an authority which is given in the deed. I shall tell the jury, that, upon the first issue, you have not given evidence, fit for their consideration, to shew that the goods were contracted for by any person having competent authority to bind the company.

CRESSWELL, J., (to the jury).—There is a new mode of constituting joint-stock companies. The result of this case will make such companies rather worse than better off than they were before. It will now be very difficult to make a contract with any joint-stock company, except with ready money. Perhaps it will be a very good thing if they were all obliged to do that, for we should not then hear so much of joint-stock companies selling their shares at a discount. The plaintiffs have not shewn that the goods were contracted for by any person having competent authority to bind the company; therefore, you must find for the defendant.—Verdict accordingly.

It can hardly be supposed that such a result was in the contemplation of the original framers of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act. The bill was, we believe, drawn originally with much care, though without a due regard to the lex mercatoria, or custom of merchants—a custom which is the growth of long practical experience among men, who, without arrogating to them any extraordinary attributes, may be admitted to understand their own business better than strangers; and of which custom or law the object is to insure rapidity and safety in the transaction of the ordinary every-day business of men engaged in commerce. The bill was then, with the fate which attends most bills, thoroughly mangled in the House of Commons; and, instead of being afterwards revised by competent lawyers, and its obscurities, ambiguities, and inconsistencies, at least in some degree removed or reconciled, it was passed in its present state, to be, while it so continues, an incessant source of insecurity and litigation, and a never-ending puzzle for the exercise of the ingenuity of judges and lawyers.

LEGACY-DUTY ON THE PROCEEDS OF REAL ESTATE SOLD UNDER A DISCRETIONARY POWER.

The long-deferred judgment in the case of The Attorney-General v. Simcox has just been reported, (1 Exch. Rep. 749); and, as it is not likely that the principle of that decision will be acquiesced in without further litigation, it may be interesting to examine into the state of the authorities.

By the stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, Sched., part 3, legacy-duty is charged on "the monies to arise from the sale, mortgage, or other disposition of any real or heritable estate directed to be sold, mortgaged, or otherwise disposed of by any will or testamentary instrument, . . . when the same shall be paid, retained, or discharged after the 31st August, 1815." The stat. 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, contains the principal provisions by which the payment of legacy-duty is now regulated, and among others a clause (sect. 22) directing the mode of ascertaining the duty on property not reduced into money, which makes no reference to real estate, because it was passed before the duty was imposed on money derived from real estate; but which is now applicable to the real estate directed to be sold, if the legatee of the produce elects to take the land in specie. Accordingly, it has been decided, that, if real estate is unequivocally directed to be sold, the legacy-duty will be payable on the value, if no sale takes place by reason of the legatee's electing to take the estate itself: Attorney-General v. Holford, (1 Price, 426), (a case on the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, Sched., part 3), where the Court rested its decision on the intelligible ground, that, by the effect of the direction in the will, the property was in equity converted into personal estate, and, if the legatee had died before election, would have been held in trust for his personal representatives. So, in Williamson v. The Advocate-

General, (10 Cl. & Fin. 1), where the will contained a direction to sell, which, it was contended, was only to take effect in case the testator left no heirs in tail, (as happened), and the legatee of the proceeds elected to take the land in specie, it was held, that the duty was payable on the value of the land. The principal debate in that case was, whether there was a direction or a mere power to sell; and it was considered, that there was an absolute direction, Lord Cottenham observing, that the criterion was, whether the trust amounted to a conversion of the real property out and out into personalty, or whether it was to be considered as a direction to sell, for the purpose of paying off certain charges, debts, and so on. "The decision," his Lordship said, "turns upon the opinion formed (varying, of course, according to the expressions used) upon the question, whether it falls under one denomination or another. . . . It is not necessary that the words of the power should contain an absolute direction to the trustees to sell. The intention of the testator must be gathered from all the provisions of the deed."

The criterion being, whether the trust amounts to a conversion or not, and not whether, in fact, a sale takes place, it follows, that, if there is a mere discretionary power to sell, not amounting to an equitable conversion, the duty will not be payable, though a sale takes place. (Re Evans, 2 C., M., & R. 206. See also some Scotch cases to the same effect, cited 10 Cl. & Fin. 14). In the case of In re Evans, Lord Lyndhurst, C. B., said, that every subject had a right so to shape the disposition of his property as to avoid the legacy-duty, if possible; and that there was no fraud in so doing. It was not necessary that the word "directed" should be found in the will; but the question was, whether there was such an obvious intention, and such a necessity for a sale to effectuate the purpose of the will, as that a sale could be said to be directed?

The principle of the preceding cases was lost sight of in The Attorney-General v. Mangles, (5 Mee. & W. 120), where there was an absolute trust for conversion and distribution of the real and personal estate as one fund, (which conversion the testator, in a subsequent part of the will, referred to as having been by him directed); but among the general powers given to the trustees was a power to defer any sale so long as they might think fit, and to cause any part or parts of the real and personal estates to be valued, instead of being sold and allotted to any of the legatees at the amount of such valuation; but to be considered as personal estate. Part of the real estate was allotted and part was sold. The Crown claimed duty both on the value of the land allotted, and on the proceeds of that which was sold. The Court, during the argument, intimated so decided an opinion as to the liability of the part which was sold, that the counsel for the legatees gave up that point. There are some other interlocutory dicta to be found in the report, from which, as well as from their judgments, it would appear that the learned judges had forgotten all that they might have learned on the equity side of the court. It was held, that the unsold land was not liable to duty. Parke, B., said—"The Crown is clearly entitled to the legacy-duty on the part of the estate which is sold; the remaining question is, whether, taking all the will together, this is a direction to the trustees to convert the estate into money, or whether it is really left in their discretion not to convert it into money, but to leave it as land?" How the Court could even allow it to be argued, that the trustees had power to prevent a conversion, after the express declaration of the testator that the land, though unsold, was to be considered as personalty, is inexplicable. The case, however, is clearly overruled by Williamson v. The Advocate-General, (10 Cl. & Fin. 1).

In The Attorney-General v. Mangles the Court did not profess to overrule the case of In re Evans, or any other case; but, in the recent case of The Attorney-General v. Simcox, the Court of Exchequer, after nearly three years' deliberation, expressly overruled the decision in Re Evans. The testator, in that case, devised his real estates to trustees and their heirs, in trust to pay the rents to his brothers and sister, and the survivors and survivor of them, for their lives and the life of the survivor of them; and after the death of the survivor to convey the estates to all his nephews and nieces living at his death, equally, as nearly as they could make partition of the same, and in the meantime to pay the rents to them. And he declared, that, for the purpose of such partition, it should be lawful for his trustees to sell all or any part of the said estates, and that they should stand possessed of the money arising from any such sale, upon the same trusts as were declared concerning the residue of the personal estate, (being similar trusts to those declared of the realty), with a superadded declaration as to the time of payment. The estates having been sold, it was held that the duty was payable. Pollock, C. B., after citing the clause in the Stamp Act, said, "Is this, then, an estate directed to be sold? If it is, then the duty attaches; if it is not, then no duty attaches." After commenting on the cases of Re Evans and The Attorney-General v. Mangles, and observing, that it was clear, from the latter case, that the existence of a discretion did not prevent the duty from attaching, his Lordship proceeded: "In the conflict or apparent conflict of authorities, we must look to the principle of the decisions, which, of course, are founded wholly on the language of the statute. The duty, it will be observed, attaches on money which is given to one or more legatees, and which has arisen from the sale of estates directed by the testator to be sold. There is certainly nothing in the language of the statute, which, in terms, confines its operation to cases where the direction to sell is absolute. If a testator should direct his land to be sold, and the money to be divided among legatees on any given contingency—as, for instance, in case his property should be under a certain value, or in case his eldest son should succeed to a family estate, or in case A. B. should agree to concur in the sale—there can surely be no doubt but that, on the happening of the contingency and consequent sale, duty would attach. The land would then be land directed to be sold. So, again, if the testator should direct the sale of a particular estate in case A. B. should think such sale to be for the benefit of the testator's children, then, upon A. B. signifying his opinion that it would be for the benefit of his children, the direction would be absolute, and duty would attach. It can make no difference that A. B. is himself the trustee for sale; and it follows, that in case of a devise to trustees to sell if they shall think it expedient and for the benefit of the cestuis so to do, duty would attach if they do think it expedient, and therefore sell." This argument is, no doubt, ingenious, and worthy of the schoolmen, but it is contrary not only to the authorities we have quoted, (including the opinion of Lord Cottenham, upon which the House of Lords acted), but to the words of the statute itself. The learned Chief Baron holds, that the duty attaches because a sale is directed, and he says, that a sale is directed whenever in event any one, acting under the authority of the testator, directs or effects a sale. But the statute imposes the duty only when the sale is "directed by the will." And, in the case put by the Chief Baron, the direction is given by another person, after the testator's decease. It would be an extraordinary use of the maxim, "Qui facit per alium facit per se," to hold that "direction" includes liberty, license, permission. If a testator says that in a given event the land shall be sold, he directs a sale; but if A. B., deriving from the testator authority to say whether a sale shall take place or not, directs a sale, how can the testator be said to direct a sale? See how far the Court of Exchequer must submit to be carried by their own reasoning. A testator gives his real estate "to trustees, upon such trusts for the benefit of his children as his widow shall appoint." The widow directs a sale and division of the proceeds among the children. Legacy-duty must, according to the Court of Exchequer, be paid; for the testator, by his agent, the widow, has directed a sale, and given the proceeds of the sale to his children. Nay, further: a testator devises real estate to such uses and upon such trusts as his son shall appoint; and, in default of appointment, to his son in fee. The son appoints to trustees, in trust to sell and pay the proceeds to strangers. According to the Court of Exchequer, the testator has directed a sale, and given the proceeds to those strangers, who must pay 10*l.* per cent. legacy-duty.

The judgment proceeds:—"The trustees, by selling, have shewn conclusively that they did think the most expedient course was to sell; and so, in the event, there was a direction to sell. Even, therefore, if there were no authority to guide us, we should have thought that duty attached; but, in truth, the case is governed by The Attorney-General v. Mangles, which is, in principle, the same as that now before us; the only distinction being, that there the devise was in trust to sell, with a power to abstain from doing so, and to allot the estate itself, instead of selling and distributing the produce; whereas here the devise is upon trust to allot, with a power, instead of so doing, to sell and distribute the proceeds. In both cases the trustees had a discretion to sell or not to sell, as they should think best for the cestuis que trust; and the exercise of that discretion by a sale was held, in The Attorney-General v. Mangles, to cause the duty to attach; and the same principle precisely applies here. The only difficulty we have felt has arisen from the decision in Re Evans, where, certainly, the Court seems to have decided, that a sale under a power to trustees to sell is not a sale of property directed to be sold, within the meaning of the act. The precise grounds on which the Court formed this opinion do not clearly appear*. The decision may, possibly, have turned on the mode in which the proceeds of the sales were in that case disposed of. The statute does not impose duty in every case of a sale directed by a will, but only where the proceeds are by the will given to legatees. Now, in the case In re Evans, the trustees were not directed to distribute the proceeds, but to invest them on securities upon the same trusts as attached on the lands sold. Possibly, the Court might have thought that this still left the character of real estate attaching on the money produced by the sale, and so that the statute did not apply. It is not necessary for us to give any opinion as to the validity of such a distinction; it is sufficient to say, that, if the case is to be taken as an authority for the general proposition, that duty does not attach in any case where the sale is made under a discretion given to the trustees to sell and distribute the proceeds, but without any positive direction imposing on them the obligation of selling. The case is clearly overruled by The Attorney-General v. Mangles, and is, as we conceive, contrary to any fair and reasonable construction of the statute."

We have already seen, that the decision in Re Evans was not affected by that in The Attorney-General v. Mangles, which was correct, so far as it was in favour of the Crown, and was clearly erroneous so far as it favoured the legatee.

We cannot think that this case of The Attorney-General v. Simcox—opposed as it is to all the authorities, except, perhaps, one; and proceeding upon a principle that necessarily involves the most extraordinary results—will be allowed to supersede the intelligible and sensible rule upon which the Courts (including the Court of highest authority) have hitherto acted, namely, that legacy-duty is payable, in respect of real estate, only where the testator has himself impressed upon it the character of personalty. S.

* We submit, that they do appear very clearly; whereas no grounds at all were stated for the decision in The Attorney-General v. Mangles, as to the duty on the proceeds of sale.

LONDON, MARCH 10, 1849.

Since our last review of decisions upon the County Courts Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), (see 12 Jur. 521), several important points have been raised under its "suggestive" influence.

It has been held, that, if judgment has been signed, an application should be made to set it aside before the application for leave to enter a suggestion in order to deprive the plaintiff of costs; (Smith v. Roberts, 13 Jur. 93; Thomas v. Cooper, 18 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 38); but that, if the defendant cannot ascertain whether judgment has been signed or not, the defendant may apply contingently to set aside the judgment, "if entered up," and to enter a suggestion, &c. (Vicars v. Mould, 13 Jur. 85). From this last case it appears, that the application to set aside the judgment may be made as part of and simultaneously with the application to enter the suggestion.

It has been doubted whether the plaintiff can be deprived of costs, under the act, where the defendant has suffered judgment by default. The words of the 129th section are, "If a verdict shall be found for the plaintiff for a sum less than 20*l.* &c., he shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs, &c., unless the judge who shall try the cause shall certify" &c. This question was mooted in Smith v. Roberts, in which Alderson, B., said, "There is another point in this case which it will be necessary to discuss some day, namely, whether the 129th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, applies at all to the case of a judgment by default. That section clearly contemplates a case where there is a verdict, either for a plaintiff or defendant, on which the judge could grant a certificate."

It is difficult to include judgment by default under the word "verdict;" and though the assessment of damages, on a writ of inquiry, may be said in one sense to be a verdict, as being the decision of a jury, yet in actions of debt no such proceeding follows a judgment by default; and, therefore, to apply the statute to judgments by default, on which a verdict or decision of a jury is given, would be to introduce a strange and inconvenient distinction between debt and assumpsit. In the former case, if the plaintiff recovered less than 20*l.* by judgment by default, he could not be deprived of costs; in the latter, he could be so deprived.

Moreover, in either form of action, the sheriff has no power to certify, as he is not "the judge who shall try the cause." (See Jefferies v. Beart, 12 Jur. 1003; and under 43 Eliz. c. 6; Jones v. Bond, 5 Dowl. 455; Claridge v. Smith, 4 Dowl. 583; Wardroper v. Richardson, 1 Adol. & Ell. 76). In Jefferies v. Beart, Wightman, J., stated, that if it was desired to give the sheriff this power on a writ of trial, it should be inserted in the order for the writ; but we submit that such a power cannot be delegated.

In a former article we stated it as our opinion, that the act does not apply to judgments by default, (12 Jur. 361); and we see no reason to alter our view of the effect of the statute in this respect.

A question has arisen on the meaning of the exception contained in sect. 128, by which the concurrent jurisdiction of the superior Courts was reserved, "where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the Court within which the defendant dwells." The ordinary construction put on these words had been, that, if the cause of action arose in any material point within the jurisdiction of the inferior Court within which the defendant dwelt, the action should be in that court; but it was said by Alderson, B., in Butler v. Corney, (17 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 266), "The section is awkwardly worded; and I am not certain that it does not mean, 'if no material part of the cause of action arises out of the jurisdiction,' instead of meaning, as I at first thought, 'if any material part arises within it.'" (And see Ghislin v. Deen, 13 Jur. 82).

This question, however, was more fully considered, and may be said to have been decided, in Wood v. Perry, (13 Jur. 129), in which it was held by the Court of Exchequer, that where any one item in a tradesman's bill, consisting of items so connected as to form one "cause of action," arises within the jurisdiction of a county court, the cause of action, in some material point, arises within that jurisdiction, and the superior Court has not concurrent jurisdiction under the 128th section of the Small Debts Act.

It may be added, that, where the facts are such as to create a reasonable doubt whether they come within the statute or not, it is the practice of the Courts not to try the merits on affidavit, but to make the rule absolute for entering a suggestion, so that the parties may have an opportunity of raising the question on the record.

MR. DRUMMOND'S BILL TO FACILITATE THE TRANSFER OF REAL PROPERTY.

The speech with which Mr. Drummond introduced his bill was amusing, if not edifying; but his bill is neither amusing nor edifying. As much of it as is intelligible appears to be a clumsy plagiarism from the plan which has been in use in the great manor of Sion for nearly a century—a plan improved and adapted by the late Mr. Duval, with great ingenuity, to the purposes of a general registry, and embodied by that gentleman, under the auspices of the Real Property Commission of 1830, into a bill, which Lord Campbell has thrice (in 1830, 1831, and 1845) unsuccessfully pressed upon the attention of the Legislature.

We have already explained Mr. Duval's plan in detail, (ante, vol. 9, part 2, p. 207). Its main features are these—to have all documents affecting lands and executed after the establishment of the registry, or copies of them, deposited at the registry-office; to make the index to the registry a collection of abstracts of title, a separate head in the index being devoted to each distinct estate or title, referring to all the documents on the register which concern that estate or title, and forming, in fact, a brief abstract of the title, kept up from time to time, as new dealings with the estate are registered. This appears to be identical in principle with the scheme of Mr. Drummond's bill, or rather with what it would have been if the framer of it had taken time and thought to reduce his own vague speculations to form and consistency. Mr. Drummond, however, does not propose that the adoption of his register should be compulsory, but only that, if once a freehold title to any land is placed on the register, all future dealings with that land must be registered.

We were at one time disposed to regard Mr. Duval's plan as the only practicable one; but we have since paid considerable attention to Mr. R. Wilson's scheme for abolishing retrospective deduction of title, (explained ante, vol. 11, p. 38), and are inclined to think that the only objection to it is its novelty. The choice rests between the two.

Mr. Drummond's bill is intrinsically beneath criticism; but as the Middlesex and Yorkshire nuisances have been the occasion of unfounded prejudice against the principle of registration, so this bill, if its absurdities are not exposed and disavowed by the advocates of registration, may be employed to the detriment of the cause.

The bill contains thirty-six clauses, of which the first is devoted to the usual work of definition, which is despatched in a somewhat unusual fashion: for example:—

"The word 'incumbrance' shall mean any legal or equitable mortgage in fee or for any less estate or interest, and also any money secured by a trust, and any money secured by or due or payable upon or in respect of any judgment, decree, or order of any court of law or equity of competent jurisdiction, and shall include lis pendens, and also any legacy, portion, lien, or other charge whereby a gross sum of money is charged on or secured to be paid or ordered to be paid by such Court as aforesaid out of land on an event or at a time either certain or contingent, and also any annual charge which by the instrument creating the same, or by any other instrument, is made re-purchasable on payment of a gross sum of money, and any other annual rent-charge issuing out of land, (not being rent payable by a lessee or other occupying tenant at a rent), and the dower or freebench of any widow entitled to dower or freebench; and the word 'incumbrancer' shall mean any person entitled to any such incumbrance as aforesaid, or entitled to require the payment or discharge thereof, or entitled to any estate or interest in lands in respect thereof; and the word 'possession' shall include the receipt of the rents and profits of the land; and the word 'owner,' as applied to any land, shall include any person entitled, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to land for an estate for life or any greater estate, and shall include the assignee of any bankrupt or insolvent person, and any person entitled, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to a lease as before defined, whether such land be or be not subject to any incumbrance, or trust for payment of an incumbrance, on such land, either in fee or for any lesser estate, and feoffees or trustees for charitable or other purposes, and shall extend to bodies politic, corporate, aggregate, or sole."

From the above definitions, it appears, that, under this bill, a trustee for a mortgagee is to be considered as at once the owner of the land and the incumbrancer on it.

Sects. 2 to 6 relate to the appointment of the registrar and subordinate officers, and the building in which the register is to be kept.

Sect. 7 enacts, "That the registrar shall receive all documents hereby authorised to be registered, and shall register the same according to the provisions of this act, and shall, at the option of the party delivering the same, or his agent, to be expressed in writing, either retain the same, or re-deliver the same when registered to such party or his agent; and the registrar shall enter upon the registry all acts and transactions which under the provisions of this act shall be done or transacted by means of the registry only, or partly by means of the registry and partly by means of other documents; and when any party who shall have delivered documents to the registrar for registration, or who shall have done or transacted any matter or transaction wholly or partly by means of the registry, shall, by himself or his agent, require a copy of the registry relating to such documents or such matter or transaction, or of a part thereof respectively, the registrar shall deliver to such party or his agent the copy so required; and all entries on the registry, and all acts done with respect thereto, and all copies which shall be given out, shall be made, done, and given according to the form and authenticated in manner and at or within the time prescribed by the rules of the registry for the time being; and in case any document shall be re-delivered as aforesaid, a fair copy thereof shall be retained by the registrar."

After providing that office copies of or extracts from the registry shall be evidence, it is enacted, (sect. 9), that the registry of registered documents, and transfers to be made on the register, shall be, as nearly as possible, according to the forms given in the schedule to the act, and either with or without such additional or other schedules, or in such other manner as shall be deemed necessary, and as the registrar shall approve of.

We have not room for the schedule in extenso. It contains five forms: A 1, A 2, &c. A 1 is a schedule of lands, comprising columns for the date of entry, the county and parish where the lands are situate, the owner, a reference to the map, a reference to the "particulars of lands," (which is the form A 3), the general names and tenures of the lands, and a "reference to incumbrances," (which is meant to be, we presume, a reference to conveyances and incumbrances). A 2 is a schedule of the maps deposited relating to A 1, and merely refers to the distinctive marks on the maps, and the boxes where they are kept. A 3 contains the particulars of the lands in A 1, and is a kind of schedule of parcels, with references to the map. A 4 is called "Particulars of registered Documents relating to A 1, except Incumbrances." It contains columns for the date of entry, the numbers and dates of the documents, the "names of parties by whom or on whose behalf documents are deposited, and in what character;" and a column headed "Nature of Document," which we give at length:—

"Lease and release, conveying the freehold parts of A 1 to X., his heirs and assigns, with covenants to surrender the copyhold parts to the use of A., his heirs and assigns, and assignment of the leasehold parts for residue of term. (Dated 1829).
"Surrender of the above copyholds.
"Admission of A., to hold to him, his heirs and assigns, according to the custom of the manor of ——.
"Transfer in books of registry, A. to B., of the above freehold lands.
"Transfer in books of registry, —— book, p. ——, of the above copyhold and leasehold land, A. to B.
"B.'s will, devising all his estates to X.
"X., executor, who proved in Prerogative Court of Canterbury."

The form A 5 is headed, "Particulars of registered Incumbrances affecting A 1, and Documents relating to them." We give the last column:—

"Mortgage in fee, A. to B., of the freehold.
"Settlement before marriage of A. with E. P.,
"Of the freehold, subject to the mortgage:
"The Copyhold:
"The Leasehold.
"Limitations,
"A., for life, without impeachment of waste:
"B., for life, as her jointure:
"Sons of the marriage successively, according to seniority, in tail male:
"A., in fee:
"Power to A. to grant leases for twenty-one years in possession, at best rents, without premiums:
"Powers to trustees to sell, exchange, enfranchise, and make partition, to apply money arising by exercise of powers—
"in payment of costs:
"in discharge of incumbrances:
"in purchase of lands, to be settled to same uses:
"in purchase of stock, or on mortgage.
"Certificate of marriage of A. and E. P.
"Certificate of baptism of T., eldest son of marriage.
"Mortgage of —— day of ——, transferred to M.
"Sale of parts of the freehold, viz.
"(Transferred to B 1, No. —).
"(This is when a new account is opened).
"Discharge of mortgage No. 1 out of proceeds of sale.
"Disentailing deed by T. Transfer, subject to the life-estate to himself in fee.
"Surrender of the copyhold for same purpose.
"Certificate of burial of E. A., late P.
"Transfer on books of registry, book ——, p. ——, of residue of freehold and all the copyhold and leasehold, to ——.
"Transferred to C 1, No. —).
"(This is when a new account is opened)."

Sect. 10 enacts, "That every person who shall propose to register any land or incumbrance shall, on depositing the documents relating thereto which he shall propose to register, deposit therewith one or more than one map, as circumstances may require, of such lands with such schedule and book of reference thereto as shall be necessary, in order to specify such lands and the divisions thereof, if any, and the acreage thereof; and such schedule and book of reference may also contain a statement or description of mines, commons, rights of way, rights of water, rights of light, and other easements, privileges, and appurtenances belonging to or enjoyed by the owner of such land in respect thereof, and shall contain a statement or description, so far as the party can make the same, of mines, commons, rights of way, rights of water, rights of light, and other easements, privileges, and appurtenances belonging to or enjoyed by any other person in, over, upon, or out of such land; and every such map as aforesaid shall be upon the same scale as the maps made under the direction of the commissioners for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales are made upon; and every such schedule and book of reference shall be made conformably to the rules of the registry; and the registrar shall have power to require alterations or additions to be made therein, or altogether to require the same to be made anew, when and in case he shall consider it necessary so to do, regard being had to the provisions of this act and the rules of the registry; and the registrar shall cause all maps, schedules, and books of reference deposited as aforesaid to be labelled, indexed, put away, and kept, and from time to time produced in such manner as the objects of this act and the rules of the registry shall require or direct."

After authorising the correction of errors in the map, and providing for searches, (which are to be made by the registrar, on the application of any party shewing good cause), &c., it is enacted, (sect. 16), "That it shall be lawful for every person, being an owner of lands, to register his lands, and such deeds, wills, or evidence relating to or affecting the same lands as at the time of registering the same lands shall be in the possession or power of such owner." [Not all of them, we hope. We fancy we see a registry-office, with the inscription, "Rubbish may be shot here," and all the muniment rooms in the country emptied against it; copies being duly returned to the owners.]

Sect. 17. "That, when any owner of lands shall register such lands, he shall also register the incumbrances, and all other estates and interests which shall at the time of such registry affect the same, and, in default of his so doing, his registry shall, so far as regards all such unregistered incumbrances, estates, or interests, be inoperative, until perfected either by himself or by or on behalf of the incumbrancer or other person whose incumbrance, estate, or interest shall have been omitted."

Sect. 18. "That, whenever any lands shall have been registered by the owner alone, or by the owner and an incumbrancer jointly, such lands shall thenceforth be and remain subject to the provisions of this act, and every subsequent transfer or transaction, whether by operation of law or otherwise, will or act, of or affecting the same, which shall be made or done by the person who registered such land, or any person deriving title through or under him, or in remainder or reversion after him, or taking in defeasance of his estate, shall also be registered, or otherwise shall be inoperative and void as against any person claiming under a registered title." [A tenant for life, therefore, will have the privilege of "throwing the inheritance into registry," just as a trustee can now throw an estate into Chancery.]

After providing, among other things, for the convenience of owners who are not in possession of the title-deeds—for the registration of incumbrances and estates in remainder and reversion—the bill enacts, in terms which we dare not attempt to abridge, as follows:—

Sect. 28. "That, from and after the day appointed for this act to come into operation, all transfers of land registered under the provisions of this act shall be made either by a document which shall be registered, or by the transferor signing in the books of the registry an acknowledgment of the transfer, and the consideration (if any) on which such transfer is founded, and a receipt for the money (if any) paid as the consideration for such transfer; and such transfer or signature as aforesaid, with such receipt as aforesaid, if necessary, shall be effectual to pass to the transferee the whole estate and interest of the transferor, as appearing on the registry, in the land transferred; and the same shall thenceforth, subject to the provisions of this act, be free from incumbrances, except registered incumbrances, and quit-rents, land-tax, tithes, perpetual rent-charges, and other similar customary payments, heriots, outgoings, and services, (if any), and any covenants, rights of way, and other easements to the benefit of which any other person may be entitled in such land; and when and in case such transfer shall transfer land which shall appear by the registry to be of freehold tenure, and held for an estate in fee-simple, free from incumbrances, except as aforesaid, the transferee shall be entitled to hold and enjoy and dispose of the same for an estate in fee-simple, or for such less estate as shall be transferred to him, free from all adverse claims, and all charges, debts, and incumbrances, except and subject as aforesaid; and when and in case such transfer shall transfer land which shall appear by the registry to be of customary or copyhold tenure, and held for a customary or copyhold estate in fee-simple, free from incumbrances, except as aforesaid, the transferee shall be entitled to hold and enjoy and dispose of the same for a customary or copyhold estate in fee-simple, as the case may be, or for such less estate as shall be transferred to him, free from all adverse claims, and all charges, debts, and incumbrances, except and subject as aforesaid; and when and in case such transfer shall transfer land which shall appear by the registry to be held on lease, free from incumbrances, except registered incumbrances, and except lessee's rent and covenants, the transferee shall be entitled to hold and enjoy and dispose of the same for the estate or interest for which the same is held, or for such less estate as shall be transferred to him, free from all adverse claims, and all charges, debts, and incumbrances, except and subject as aforesaid: provided nevertheless, that transfers of customary or copyhold lands, under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the same fines, fees, and expenses as they would have been subject to if made by surrender, according to the custom of the manor of which such lands are holden; provided also, that leasehold lands which are or shall be subject to any condition or restriction against assignment, sub-letting, or other alienation, either by operation of law or act of the party, without license of the lessor, shall not be transferred, under the provisions of this act, without such license as would be necessary in case they were transferred without reference to the provisions of this act."

The meaning is here somewhat eclipsed by the beauty of the composition and style, and the only observation upon which we shall venture with regard to it is, that the immunity from incumbrances which this section professes to confer is apparently confined to the case of a transfer by acknowledgment in the books of the registry, and does not extend to a transfer by a registered deed of conveyance, the effect of which is governed by the somewhat more intelligible provisions of the 25th section, which enacts,

"That from and after the day on which any land shall be registered every estate or incumbrance which shall thenceforth be created on such land, or transferred, shall be created or transferred only by a registered document, or by a registered acknowledgment under the hand of the owner of such land, and shall, as regards subsequent purchasers or transferees for money or other valuable consideration, and incumbrancers, affect only the specific land mentioned in such document or acknowledgment, and no other; and no such purchaser, transferee, or incumbrancer shall be affected by notice, otherwise than notice on the registry of any prior estate, charge, or incumbrance, but in this respect all equitable and other doctrines of notice shall have no operation, and shall be altogether disregarded; and all unregistered transfers, charges, and incumbrances shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against such purchasers for money or other valuable consideration, and as against such subsequent incumbrancers: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights or claims, as against the owner or transferor of any land or incumbrance, of any party who has or shall have any right to or claim upon any such land or incumbrance, but shall only prejudice such rights or claims as aforesaid as upon or against the land or incumbrance so transferred; provided also, that entry on the registry shall be full notice to all persons of all transactions registered from the date of the entry thereof respectively."

The remaining sections provide (more suo) for the transfer and discharge of incumbrances, for conferring an indefeasible title after thirty years' registry (preceded by advertisement in the London Gazette) and undisturbed possession, for giving to registered mortgagees certain powers and remedies, for registering disentailing deeds and assurances by married women, and for dispensing (which we venture to suggest should be done at all events, and by the same act which abolishes Smithfield-market) with registry in any local office.

Such is Mr. Drummond's bill. To criticise it were to waste both our own time and that of our readers. We hope soon to be able to discuss the views of the present Real Property Commissioners on the important and difficult subject which Mr. Drummond proposes to dispose of in this rough-and-ready way. Mr. Duval's bill, though nearly three times as long as Mr. Drummond's, does not contain a superfluous word, and lays out and settles the minutest details of a simple and intelligible plan, in language at once elegant, popular, and precise. As an instance of that reliance on the extent and limits of the meaning of words which was the secret of Mr. Duval's concise style, (examples of which are as frequent in his opinions as they are rare in his conveyancing drafts), we may cite the following definition from his interpretation clause:—"And the word 'assurance' shall extend to a contract." Mr. Drummond, we have seen, is more explanatory, and tells us that the word "land" shall extend to messuages, lands, &c., and that a mortgage is an incumbrance.

LAW BOOKS recently published by S. SWEET, 1, Chancery-lane; and V. and R. STEVENS & G. S. NORTON, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn, and 194, Fleet-street.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 24s. boards,

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the "Common-law Commissioners" suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develope. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on "Modern Pleading," as incident to the above "rules," and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy "reports." The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuriâ in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

This Society transacts the usual business of Life Assurance, and presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or for a Guarantee Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at 2 o'clock. Assurances may be effected by applying on any other day between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Offices of the Society, 57, Chancery-lane, London, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information can be obtained.

THE BELLE SAUVAGE ESTATE, LUDGATE HILL.

THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF CUTLERS are now prepared to receive Tenders for Leases of this important Estate, which occupies an area of nearly 30,000 square feet, and adjoins on one side the open space formerly the site of the Fleet Prison. It comprises the extensive and very desirable premises within the Gateway of the Belle Sauvage-yard, Ludgate-hill, consisting of ten houses and warehouses, numbered from 1 to 10, of which the Belle Sauvage Hotel forms a considerable part. There is also a large range of stabling, &c., at the back or north end of the yard, and approached by the second archway. The Premises are most conveniently situated, and are admirably adapted for an Hotel, Chambers, Warehouses, Clubhouses, and for almost any Establishment requiring extensive accommodation. The Leases of the property will expire at Michaelmas, 1849, but it may be now viewed by consent of the tenants, and Plans and further particulars may be obtained at the offices of Messrs. Beaumont & Thompson, 19, Lincoln's-inn-fields; and of Mr. Richard Tress, Architect, 23, Little St. Thomas Apostle.

Tenders may be submitted for the whole or any part of the property, and for any term of years; and they are to be sent, sealed, to the Hall, in Cloak-lane, on or before Wednesday, the 9th May, 1849.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The two first Divisions averaged 22*l.* per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third, 28*l.* per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36*l.* per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

LONDON, MARCH 17, 1849.

Our readers will have seen in The Jurist of last week the abstract of Mr. Drummond's bill for a registration of transfers of real property. The bill itself has met with quite as unqualified disapprobation in the House of Commons as it has in our pages; and, though it is committed, probably it will never re-appear. If it does, it will be in a form so unlike its present form, that it will be no longer Mr. Drummond's bill. That is, however, of little consequence. It is clear that the country is not yet ripe for a general registry; but it is equally clear that a craving for a registry has commenced, and that it will go on increasing gradually till it reaches the point of clamorous hunger, and will demand to be satisfied. At present, the great point is to discuss, not what shall be the specific arrangements of any registry bill, but what shall be its general principle. The first and most difficult point to settle, and that on which men's minds appear most to differ, is, whether a registration should be voluntary or compulsory. We, who are somewhat of the laissez faire school, and consider land but as a form of transferable and marketable property, not differing much in its marketable incidents, if let alone, from other property, should be disposed to think it not of much importance whether a registry is voluntary or compulsory. If registry is to have any effect, it will be this—that a purchaser will be enabled to assure himself, by inspection of the registry, of all the existing dispositions of the ownership of any given hereditaments, assuming, of course, as the very basis of all efficient registration, that a purchaser is not to be affected by anything that does not appear upon the registry. Now, first, in reference to the registration of existing titles, the effect of a compulsory registry would be simply to distinguish, by the act of the Legislature, between good titles and bad or defective ones. The purchaser, looking at the registry, would see that the title to Blackacre was complete, and the title to Whiteacre incomplete, and he would bid accordingly. If there were not a compulsory registry, then, if he found Blackacre registered, and Whiteacre not, he would infer that the owner of Whiteacre had an incomplete title, and he would again bid accordingly. If the question be looked at with reference to the registry only of future transactions, then the effect of voluntary or compulsory registration would be this:—So far as the owners of any interest in a particular piece of land shall have availed themselves of the registry, so far will the value of that land be beneficially affected by the degree of certainty derivable from the fact: so far as there shall be an absence of registration, in so far will the value of the land be subject to and affected by the calculations applied to lands purchased under the existing system. The whole question resolves itself into one of increase or decrease of the market price of lands; and it may be thought that the vendors and purchasers of land will be able to make their own calculation, upon the inferences to be drawn from the fact of total or partial non-registration, if registration is accessible, with a degree of accuracy equivalent in its results to the certainty arising from actual universal registry. On the other hand, we cannot say that we see, in at least future compulsory registration, anything that can be either very dreadful or very hurtful to the proprietors of land.

The advantage of concealing one's transactions with his landed estate is more ideal than substantial, in almost all conceivable cases. Indeed, the concealment is, in general, only the same sort of concealment as that of the ostrich, when it hides its head in a corner that nobody may see its body. No man effectually conceals, for anything more than a fraction of time, his alienation, whether it be by sale or mortgage, of any property from which he derives a visible income, in any of the cases in which he can suffer material loss of credit or means—that is, in any of the cases where the mortgage or sale is effected, not for the purpose of mere conversion, but for the purpose of some application of the equivalent, which diminishes the means of expenditure of the seller.

If a man outruns, and mortgages to pay off heavy debts, he never can, in fact, conceal the transaction. If a man of 10,000*l.* a year of landed property sells any of his land for the purpose of having his property in the funds, or in other investments, he may conceal the transaction; but it is not in such cases that he troubles himself to do so. It is only when the consequences of alienation are a descent in pecuniary resources, that a man desires to conceal the alienation; and then, we assert, that he very rarely can conceal the alienation for any material portion of time—that is, if the property aliened was a property from which he derived a present income.

The dread, then, of publicity from a registry is one which, we apprehend, is only well founded in regard to transactions of a kind which cannot, even in the present state of things, be kept shrouded from publicity, and is, therefore, scarcely an element to be considered in the question. On the whole, we are, therefore, inclined to think, that, though much may be said with apparent force for and against compulsory, or for and against voluntary registration, it is really a matter of very little consequence, and may be safely left to the wishes or the fancies of those who are and those who would be landed gentlemen.

The next point of importance is, whether, if a registry exists, it should be universally accessible; and this we conceive to be a question of a very different kind. If a registry is only to be accessible on shewing a primâ facie interest in examining it—as, that one is interested in an estate by contract to buy it or otherwise—the result would be to put the honest public in a worse position than they now are, and to put it in the power of the dishonest public only to make a mischievous use of the registry. It may be well taken for granted, that no man for his amusement will go to a registry-office and pay fees to read tiresome deeds and entries. Every man who goes to inspect a registry goes because he has an interest, or because he has acquired, or has contracted to acquire, or bonâ fide wishes to acquire, some interest in the land, or because he wishes to pry into his neighbour's title, and to do what is called pick a hole therein. In the first class of cases he desires to make an honest use, in the second a dishonest use, of the registry.

It cannot be pretended, that the first sort of inquirers should be incumbered in their search by any unnecessary vexation or impediments; so to incumber them would be not only an injustice to them, but clearly an injury to the value and marketability of land. In practice there are already two classes of titles which are publicly registered and accessible to everybody; we mean wills and specifications of patents. And though occasionally, perhaps, there may be instances of persons improperly using those registries, for the purpose of finding out flaws in titles, and making their bargain with the victim accordingly, yet we believe that such instances are so rare as to be quite an exception to the rule.

With regard to the class of persons who would make a trade of inspecting registries for the purpose of finding out flaws in titles, it may be safely assumed, that they would not hesitate at finding means to evade any rule requiring a primâ facie claim to search to be shewn which should not be so stringent as to be a heavy tax upon the search of the bonâ fide inquirer. We apprehend, therefore, unless a registry were perfectly accessible to the public at only such moderate charges as must be necessary or proper, by way of producing a revenue to the office, it would be worse than useless.

ON THE CUSTODY OF INFANTS.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the persons of infants has been derived by all the great writers on this subject directly from the Crown, by an implied delegation of its authority, as parens patriæ, to assume the care of those who are unable to care for themselves*.

This definition has been repeatedly recognised and acted upon in the early cases†; and even in a very recent one, (In re Spence, 2 Phill. 247), Lord Cottenham asserted the jurisdiction to be as stated above, in the plainest language. Nevertheless, the inconvenience of exercising this authority has been occasionally so strongly felt, that some judges have seemed desirous to limit the power of the Court to take the custody of an infant's person from his natural guardian, even to give it to the mother, to cases where some pecuniary advantage is secured to the infant as an inducement for the alteration. Too many protestations cannot be made against any departure from principle in these cases. The consequences of a restriction of the authority of the Court might produce great injustice. Suppose a case that has often happened, that both father and mother are equally unable to procure an actual settlement to be made upon their infant children; that the father is a man of immoral habits, improvident, houseless, and cruel to his children, while the mother, who is desirous to have the custody and management of them apart from her husband, is, though poor, industrious, and in every way better fitted to care for all their temporal and spiritual interests; is the Court, in such a case, to refuse its interference? If the jurisdiction be, as it is stated, the delegated authority of a parens patriæ, under such circumstances, surely, the Court would be inclined to interfere. Lord Cottenham, in the recent case above referred to‡, says, "I have no doubt about the jurisdiction. The cases in which this Court interferes on behalf of infants are not confined to those in which there is property. This Court interferes on behalf of infants, qua infants, by virtue of the prerogative which belongs to the Crown as parens patriæ, and the exercise of which is delegated to the Great Seal." And the grounds for such interference he stated to be, "misconduct on the father's part of such a nature as to contaminate and corrupt the morals of his children."

This dictum of his Lordship is supported by numerous cases, some of the most important of which are referred to in their order.

It will be observed, that, in most of them, the infants were entitled to property in settlement; but this circumstance was not relied upon in any case, as a ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction.

It is obvious, that, unless the infants or their parents had property, they would seldom venture to institute proceedings in Chancery, so that the case we have supposed cannot often be brought before the notice of the Court. The question of custody has, however, lately been raised, under circumstances such as have been hypothetically stated above; and it is worthy of consideration, whether or not that was a case for interference.

In Cruise v. Orby Hunter, (2 Bro. C. C. 499), the petition stated the father to be in embarrassed circumstances, and that his infant son was entitled to considerable property, and to a maintenance by his grandfather's will, and prayed that the father might be restrained from taking the infant abroad, or improperly interfering with his education, which was directed by his mother, who lived separate from her husband. Affidavits on either side imputed gross charges to both father and mother. There seems not to have been any offer to support the child on the mother's part, but the Court would not allow the father to interfere with him, and plainly asserted its jurisdiction.

In Ex parte Warner, (4 Bro. C. C. 101), the infants petitioned that a guardian might be appointed to have the care of their persons and their education during their minority, and that their father might be restrained from removing them from the schools and situations in which they were placed, on the grounds that the father had been guilty of cruelty to the mother, and was insolvent, and unable to provide for the petitioners, having no settled place of abode. It appeared that the infants were entitled to a little property, and the Court, without requiring any settlement to be made upon them, granted the prayer.

In Wellesley v. Beaufort, (2 Russ. 1), Lord Eldon would not give the custody of the infants to the father on his petition, it being proved that he was grossly immoral, and taught his children habits of immorality, and that he was living, up to the time of the petition, in open adultery with the wife of another man; but the mother being dead, he referred it to the Master to approve of some person to take charge of them. The children seem to have been entitled to settled property; but the Lord Chancellor declared himself uninfluenced, in such a case, by pecuniary considerations; and, in answer to the objection, that the Court only exercised this jurisdiction where it had property, said, "It was not from any want of jurisdiction that the Court does not act, but from a want of means to exercise its jurisdiction, because the Court cannot take upon itself the maintenance of all the children in the kingdom."

In De Manneville v. De Manneville, (10 Ves. 52), the wife had left her husband, taking with her their infant child, whom her husband afterwards forcibly recovered; and the petition was, that the infant might be restored to its mother, or, at least, that the father might be restrained from taking it abroad. It was sworn, that the husband had ill-used his wife, for the purpose, it seems, of compelling her to make a will in his favour of certain property which she was empowered to appoint, that he was irreligious, and held jacobinical opinions on political matters. The infant was entitled to some property, settled upon it, after the death of its father; and Lord Chancellor Eldon, asserting the jurisdiction of the Court, made an order, restraining the father from removing or doing any act towards or for the purpose of removing the child from the jurisdiction.

In Whitfield v. Hales, (12 Ves. 492), the petition was on behalf of infants, for a reference to the Master to appoint a guardian, and a proper allowance for maintenance. The affidavits alleged gross ill-treatment and cruelty towards the infants by their father, for which he had been prosecuted and imprisoned. Under these circumstances, the order applied for was made.

In Shelly v. Westbrooke, (Jac. 266, n.), the infants were living with their maternal grandfather, who had settled 2000*l*., 4*l*. per Cents, upon them. The father was restrained from taking them away, because it was proved that his principles were atheistical, and his conduct immoral. And even though it seems to have been represented, that the pecuniary interests of the children would suffer, the Lord Chancellor declared, that he would not sacrifice to such considerations interests which he deemed of higher importance.

The Court has even interfered for considerations of much less weight, as, for example, in the case of Lyons v. Blenkin, (Jac. 245), where a grandmother provided by will for her grandchildren, and attempted to appoint their aunt their guardian, to whom she also gave the management of the property devised to the grandchildren. The father, having permitted his children to remain in their aunt's care for many years, was not allowed to remove them without some good reason, as he was not able to educate them in an equally advantageous manner. In another case, (Anon., Jac. 264), the petition was by the mother, who was separately entitled to considerable property, and living apart from her husband, that the infants might be placed with her to be educated as the Court should approve, on the ground only that the husband was not in circumstances which enabled him to educate them, and the mother offered to provide for their maintenance. The Court refused the application, saying, that when it interfered against the father upon pecuniary considerations only, they must be solid considerations, not merely expectations. We must admit this to be a reasonable distinction, and it is no doubt just that the father should not be deprived of his children on the grounds of poverty alone. But this decision can afford no argument for a similar condition, where the father has by his conduct shewn himself unfit to have the care of his children. If the Court cannot in such a case interfere with the custody of infants, simply because the father is an improper guardian, without entering into any considerations of pecuniary advantage, it would seem that its jurisdiction over the persons of infants has been wrongly defined.

The decision to which these observations particularly refer is one of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in the case of In re Fynn, (11 Jur. 713). In that case, infants residing with their mother and grandmother, at the house of the latter, petitioned by their grandmother, as next friend, that some proper person might be appointed guardian, and the custody of the children committed to him under the direction of the Court, and that their father might be restrained from recovering possession of them by habeas corpus, or in any manner interfering with them without leave of the Court.

The grounds stated for the application and supported by affidavits were, fraudulent representations of the father made to induce the marriage, cruelty to his wife, blasphemous and obscene language, drunken habits, distress from his extravagance, and ill-treatment and neglect of the children after the wife had left him. Some of these allegations were denied by affidavits by and on behalf of the father; but sufficient proof of their truth was given to induce the Vice-Chancellor to say, that his strong inclination was, to interfere with the father's power over his children, more especially as it appeared he was unable to educate or maintain them; and, to use the language of the learned judge, "to restore the boys to him, as it seems to me, would be, in all human probability, to consign them to unsettled and irregular modes of living, adverse in the highest degree to culture and discipline, to say nothing of the occasional, if not the constant, privations of the ordinary comforts, perhaps decencies, of life in their class in society, to which, in my judgment, they would be very likely to be exposed." And, again, after reading some letters of the father, his Honor remarks, "I must certainly say, that, on the whole of the evidence taken together, he appears to be a person to whose guardianship or care any reasonable man having an option would strongly object to entrust children." And again, "Mr. Fynn's clear unfitness, in my judgment, to be guardian of his children, if he were not their father, has been exhibited in such a manner, arises from and exists in such a state of circumstances with respect, not merely to his means of supporting his children, but with regard to that and other weighty and important considerations, such as to render it incumbent on the Court, for the sake of the children, to interfere against their father." Yet a few sentences further on, his Honor says, "I believe that I ought to require either an actual appropriation of property or income, or some security." And the only interference which seemed proper to his Honor was an interim order, "without prejudice to any proceedings under the writ of habeas corpus or otherwise at law, for the purpose of obtaining possession of the infants," in pursuance of which proceedings Mr. Baron Alderson shortly afterwards directed the delivery of the infants to their father.

This case raises the question of the jurisdiction exactly in the manner supposed above. Neither the father nor mother seem to have been able to make any settlement upon the children. The father was shewn to be unfit to have the care of them; and the question was not between him and a stranger seeking to be appointed guardian, but whether, under these circumstances, the Court would deprive the mother of her children, and give them into the custody of such a father.

Now, if the jurisdiction of the Court to interfere be independent of any pecuniary consideration, this seems to have been an occasion for exercising it; but if the decision in this case is to be regarded as a precedent, it will in future be idle to deny, that questions of property are in these cases after all of paramount importance.

REGISTRATION OF MUTUAL INSURANCE SOCIETIES.

The singular blunder committed by one of the "amenders" of the bill for the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, in expressly extending its operation to mutual assurance societies, without providing for the peculiarities of the constitutions of such companies, has been much discussed. But some companies on the mutual principle have been registered under the act; and until the appearance of an article on the subject in The Law Magazine, (vol. 9, N. S., p. 38), we did not know that any one thought it "impossible for an assurance company, starting on the pure mutual principle, to comply with the requisitions of the act, necessary for obtaining a certificate of complete registration." As the difficulty has since been actually raised and insisted on in practice, it may be useful to consider whether it is really insuperable. There is a little quibble involved in the words "pure mutual principle," for no company ever starts on that principle in the sense in which the expression is here used. A fund is always subscribed at the commencement for preliminary expenses, which is intended to be subsequently repaid out of the joint or mutual fund. But waiving this, we think that it is perfectly easy to start and completely register such a company, in strict accordance with the requisitions of the act. We think that the clauses of the act which seem to make indispensable things inconsistent with the mutual assurance principle, are not so stringent as they have been represented to be; and even if they were to be so construed, might be literally complied with by means of apt provisions in the deed of settlement, involving formal, but not real, departure from the strict mutual principle.

Let us first see what are the apparent difficulties. The act applies to (among others) "every joint-stock company as hereinafter defined," established for the purpose of assurance or insurance; and the term, "joint-stock company," under the tyranny of an interpretation clause, is made to include "every assurance company or association for the purpose of assurance or insurance on lives, &c., whether joint-stock companies or mutual insurance societies, or both." Nothing can be plainer. The word "subscriber," when used in the act, means "any person who shall have agreed in writing to take or have taken any share in a proposed company, or in a company formed, and who shall not have executed the deed of settlement or a deed referring thereto." The word "shareholder" means (if the context or subject-matter is consistent with such meaning) "any person entitled to a share in a company, and who has executed the deed of settlement or a deed referring to it; or in the case of mutual benefit societies, any person who shall be an assured member thereof." (See sect. 26, where this definition appears to have been forgotten).

There is nothing in the requisitions for provisional registration calling for remark. A return of the names of the "subscribers" is essential only when there are any.

Prior to complete registration, it is necessary (sect. 7) to "form the company" by a deed of settlement, in a schedule to which are to be set forth certain particulars; among which are—

"4. The amount of the proposed capital, and of any proposed additional capital, and the means by which it is to be raised."

"6. The total amount of the capital subscribed or proposed to be subscribed at the date of such deed." (What does this mean, if it does not mean the same as No. 4? Mr. Taylor, the assistant registrar, says, it appears to mean the amount of all the shares then taken. It cannot mean that, we should think. Does it mean the amount of the first call?)

"7. The division of the capital (if any) into equal shares, and the total number of such shares, each of which is to be designated by a separate number in a regular series."

8. The names, &c. of all the then subscribers, according to the information possessed by the officers of the company, (that is to say, the names of all the persons, if any, who have agreed to take shares, and have not executed the deed of settlement. If all who have agreed to take shares have also executed the deed of settlement, there will be no subscribers).

9. The number and distinctive numbers of the shares which each subscriber holds, distinguishing those on which the deposit has been paid.

The deed must contain a covenant on the part of every shareholder to pay up the amount of the instalments on the shares taken by him, and must make provision for such of the purposes set forth in Schedule A. to the act, as the nature and business of the company shall require, and must be signed by at least one-fourth in number of the persons who, at the date of the deed, have become subscribers, and who shall hold at least one-fourth of the maximum number of shares in the company. ("Maximum number of shares" meaning, we presume, in the peculiar phraseology which has been imported into this act, "shares actually subscribed for?" for if that be not the meaning, then no company with capital can be completely registered until one-fourth of the maximum capital has been subscribed for—a rule which has certainly not been enforced). We need not enter minutely into the provisions mentioned in Schedule A., as such of them only are to be made as the nature and business of the company shall require, which seems to be a permission to a mutual insurance company (as the act allows such a company to exist) to omit those which do not suit its constitution. Among the provisions mentioned in that schedule is one "for insuring that each shareholder shall have a vote," and for prescribing "the number of shares or the amount of interest" by which directors are to be qualified.

Sect. 28 of the act disqualifies any person from being or acting as director who does not hold in his own right at least one share in the company.

These are all the provisions of the act to which it is material to advert. The inapplicability of most of them to a mutual insurance society is obvious. The principal difficulties arise out of the requisition that the deed is to be signed by at least one-fourth in number of the subscribers, who shall hold at least one-fourth of the maximum number of shares in the company; and that every director shall hold at least one share in the company. Everything turns upon the meaning of the word "share," which is not one of the words explained in the interpretation clause. In some parts of the act it seems to be used to denote exclusively a share in a joint stock or capital, as where the word "shareholder" is defined to mean a person entitled to a share in the company, and who has executed the deed of settlement; or, in the case of mutual benefit societies, any person who shall be an assured member thereof. Here the "share" held by a person interested in a joint stock or capital seems to be distinguished from the interest of a member of a mutual society in the concern; but this use of the word does not imply that it is incapable of a more extended meaning. The meaning is, that, in the case of a company with joint stock, the shareholder must have executed the deed; in the case of a mutual benefit society, it is sufficient if he be an assured member. No meaning is expressly appropriated to the word. When it is necessary to denote a title to an aliquot part of the joint capital, the word is used in the sense of a share of capital; but that is not the only meaning of which it is capable. A share is not necessarily an aliquot part of anything. It may mean a portion incommensurable with any other portion; and it may be used with reference to an association to denote other things than a portion of a joint capital. A share in the profits, a share in the benefits, a share in the risks, a share in the management, of any concern, are familiar expressions, and may mean any kind, amount, or degree of participation in the things spoken of. In the Amicable Society, the interest of the insured members is expressly divided into "shares," each of which is guaranteed to produce at least 200*l*. In the Equitable Society, on the contrary, the use of the word "share" has been avoided to the extent of prudery. Bearing in mind, then, that the act expressly takes notice of the distinction between insurance societies with joint stock (a term there used in the restricted sense of capital divided into equal shares) and pure mutual insurance societies, that it expressly requires the complete registration of both kinds of societies, and that, when it does prescribe the division into equal shares of the capital of a company, it adds the words "if any," it is plain, that when the word "share" is used in the act with reference to a pure mutual insurance society, it must be in some other sense than that of an aliquot part of a subscribed capital divided into equal shares. From the definition of the word "shareholder" with reference to such societies, it must be inferred, that by a share in such a society is meant the interest of an assured member, not the interest of every person assured by the society, but the interest of every person who, by the rules of the society, is not only insured, but also a member of it.

Understanding, then, the word to have this meaning, when applied to a mutual society, and to have the meaning of "aliquot part of a divided capital" only where it is applied to an ordinary joint-stock company, and remembering that the act expressly suggests that there may be societies within its operation without any capital to divide, let us see how the provisions which are supposed to create a difficulty must be applied.

The word "subscriber" is defined to mean, any person who shall have agreed to take any share in a proposed company, and shall not have executed the deed of settlement. This may include a person who has agreed to become an assured member of a mutual society, although, from the subsequent definition of a "shareholder," it is rather to be inferred that mutual societies were not contemplated in the former definition. In establishing such societies, however, the safe course will be, to assume that all persons who, at the date of the deed of settlement, have agreed to become assured members, are subscribers within the meaning of the act, and to return their names for provisional and complete registration accordingly.

The fourth particular, required by sect. 7 to be set forth in the schedule to the deed of settlement, is the amount of the proposed capital, and of any proposed additional capital. This cannot mean the funds to be raised by the contributions of the members of a mutual company, which are not capital, in the ordinary sense of the word, and are, necessarily, of indeterminate amount; but it must mean a capital of fixed amount divided into equal shares; and if there is to be (as the act contemplates there may be) no such capital, the return, in such case, will be simply, nil. The same observation disposes of Nos. 6 and 7. No. 7 was intended to lay the foundation of a register of shareholders, for which, as we shall presently shew, no provision appears to be made in the case of a mutual society—a defect in the act—but no obstacle to the registration of such societies under it.

The return to No. 8 will also be 0, if there are no subscribers, which may happen even in the case of an ordinary joint-stock company.

No. 9 evidently refers to subscribers to an ordinary joint-stock company; and, if all the persons who have agreed to take shares have also executed the deed of settlement, the return to this will, even in the case of such a company, be 0, though it is more than probable, that, in this requisition, and in the preceding one, shareholders as well as subscribers were intended. It will be as well, however, in the case of a mutual society, to return the names of all persons who, at the date of the deed, have agreed to become assured members, and to appropriate to them and retain distinctive numbers for their intended policies.

The deed must contain a covenant by every shareholder to pay up the amount of the instalments on the shares taken by him. This must mean only when there are any such instalments to be paid. If (as the act contemplates) there is no capital, or if the full amount of shares are, and, by the terms of the deed of settlement, must be fully paid up before a subscriber becomes a shareholder, there can be no covenant to pay instalments. Such covenant, then, is not essential in every case, and, therefore, (though an argument may perhaps be raised on this point), the requisition only applies when there is to be a liability to pay "calls;" and premiums or payments for mutual insurance are not "instalments" within its scope. But the deed of settlement of a mutual insurance company generally contains a provision for making calls on members in the purely hypothetical case of the fund raised by the regular premiums being insufficient to pay the claims on policies which have fallen in.

The deed must be signed by at least one-fourth in number of the persons who, at its date, have become subscribers, and who shall hold at least one-fourth of the maximum number of shares.

There is no maximum number of shares in a mutual society, and if there can be no "subscribers" to a pure mutual society, in the sense of the act, (and every clause in which the word is used strengthens our suggestion, that the definition does not contemplate the proposed members of a mutual society), then this requisition cannot apply to such a company.

If a share in a pure mutual society means, as we think we have shewn it must mean, the interest of an assured member, then sect. 28 merely requires that every director in such a society must be an assured member—a reasonable and convenient requisition.

We have now discussed, and, we think, satisfactorily disposed of, all the objections which have been urged to the possibility of applying the Registration Act to a mutual society; objections which have fortunately not found any favour in the Registrar's office. But, even if we grant to the objectors that the word "share" is used throughout the act exclusively in the sense of an aliquot part of a fixed subscribed capital, and that every company to be registered must possess such capital, and be worked by means of such shares, we still say that a company may be registered on the purely mutual principle. We have not space for, nor is the objection worth, any detailed discussion of this point, but the following outlines of clauses to be inserted in the deed of settlement of such a society will sufficiently explain our meaning:—

"Capital, 500*l.*, to be divided into 480,000 shares of one farthing each."

"No person to become a shareholder or assured member without taking a policy to the amount of £—— at the least; and also a share or shares in the capital of 500*l.*, and paying up the full amount of such share or shares."

"The first premium to be paid by an insured member to be the difference between the amount mentioned in the tables and the amount paid up by such member in respect of the share or shares taken by him on such insurance."

"No share to be held apart from the policy taken therewith during the subsistence of such policy."

"No dividend to be declared or paid on any share, otherwise than by way of bonus on the policy taken."

"The payment, satisfaction, forfeiture, or discharge of a policy to be deemed to be a satisfaction of all claims of the holder of the share or shares taken therewith, which share or shares shall thereupon revert to the society, and may be re-allotted on the grant of a new policy or new policies to any other person or persons."

Two or three enactments, which are supposed to impose inconvenient restrictions on the conduct of the business of a mutual assurance society, even after it has passed the ordeal of the Registrar's office, remain to be considered.

Sect. 11 requires half-yearly returns of transfers of shares and of persons who have otherwise ceased to be or become shareholders—that is to say, in the case of a mutual assurance society, every act within the knowledge of the director, by which a person becomes or ceases to be an assured member, must be returned; but no return is necessary of a transfer of the benefit of a policy in equity, with or without a power of attorney, not amounting to a charge of membership. By sect. 13, no transfer of a share is to have validity, for the purpose of constituting the transferee a shareholder, or entitling him to receive any part of the profits of the concern until it has been returned. Here, again, is no restriction upon transferring the benefit of a policy, consistently with the constitution of the society, without making or purporting to make a transfer of the membership; nor is there any restriction, even in the case of an ordinary joint-stock company, upon an equitable assignment of the dividends upon a share or shares, with a power to sue in the name of the transferor. The same observation applies to the enactment in the 26th section, that "no shareholder shall be entitled to receive any dividends or profits, or to act as shareholder, until he has executed the deed of settlement, or some deed referring thereto, and has paid up all calls due from him." Every assured member of a mutual society must, therefore, execute the deed of settlement, or some deed referring thereto, which deed is not required to be delivered to or kept by the company, and may, therefore, be the policy itself; or, in case of assignment, the deed of assignment, containing a covenant on the part of the assured to abide by the provisions of the deed of settlement, (such covenant, as a necessary incident to the transaction, not rendering the policy or assignment liable to any additional stamp).

The provisions for enforcing payment of calls need not be discussed; they are wholly inapplicable to mutual insurance societies.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The two first Divisions averaged 22*l.* per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third, 28*l.* per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36*l.* per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 122,000*l.* per annum.

LONDON, MARCH 24, 1849.

The next question of principle, which is, we apprehend, essential to the successful operation of any registration of titles, is, that all deeds shall be registered at length. If the present still verbose style of drafting makes that impracticable, consistently with its continuance, the Legislature should couple registration with some efficient measure for rendering conveyances short. But, whether they remain long, or whether they become models of brevity, all deeds must be found, by the searchers in a registry-office, set out in full, if the registry is not intended to be a snare, instead of a benefit. A few examples readily suggest themselves of the kind of case in which any mere abstracts would be useless; in which, in fact, according to the present practice, abstracts never do satisfy a purchaser's conveyancer. Of what use, for instance, is it to be informed that A. appointed under a deed conveying to uses to bar dower, or that an appointment was made by a married woman by will, under a power given to her to appoint by deed or will, unless the precise terms of the limitation or power are set forth? Of what use would it be to learn that A., a mortgagee, took a conveyance of the equity of redemption, with an assignment of the debt to a trustee, unless the exact nature and language of the deed was known: or of what use would it be to a person purchasing from one who claimed under trustees for sale, to know, that, by a certain deed, lands were conveyed to trustees upon divers trusts, with powers of sale; and that, by another deed, the trustees, exercising their power, had sold and conveyed? It is manifest, that in these, which are but the most familiar instances, and in numberless others, unless a registry shews the whole transaction in its details, it is useless. If it be said, that, under the present system of laying abstracts before counsel, deeds are not set out at length, the answer is, in the first place, that the abstract is, or ought to be, prepared from the deeds themselves, by a solicitor possessed of sufficient legal science and acumen to know when the whole or portions of a deed require to be fully set out, and when not; and, in the second place, that, in reference to the particular difficulties of each transaction, if the solicitor does not set out the important passages of a deed fully, there is still the vigilance of the conveyancer to rely upon; and it is not often that he neglects to call for a verbatim copy of any powers or limitations affecting the essence of the title under which his client is to take. It is not necessary in an abstract of title laid before a particular purchaser, about to purchase a particular interest, that everything should be set out fully, for the very reason that the attention of his advisers is particularly directed to the points on which, with reference to the particular purchase, full information must be looked for. But a registry is an irrevocable abstract of title destined for all purchasers; prepared beforehand; without any knowledge of the point of the title from which a particular future purchaser will wish to start, or the prts of it on which full informaation may be essential to him. Hence it is, that, unless it contains a full record of every transaction at length, it must, of necessity, fail, in probably a vast majority of cases, to afford the requisite information to the particular inquirer.

The next question, which is in the nature of a question of principle, is, the mode of identifying parcels; for on this depends the quiet enjoyment of property as much as on the exhibition of its legal devolution, and of the rights incident to it. And as a registry is intended to be an engine of security, not for a day or a year, but for generations, it should be so constituted as to make identification of parcels independent of the changes which the fancies of men, in reference to nomenclature, not less than their wants in reference to subdivision, tend to introduce. That many titles are unmarketable, from the difficulty of identifying the triangular piece of land, now called, perhaps, "The Home-field," and known by that name as far back as living or hearsay evidence can be carried, as a portion of some other piece of land of a totally different name, and, perhaps, of a totally different shape, according to the description of the parcels in the older deeds, is a fact but too well borne out by daily experience; and the question is, how the difficulty is to be met. That maps of some kind must be used, is tolerably clear. But we apprehend that it is not the mere addition to a deed of conveyance of any kind of map of the parcels that will meet the principle of the difficulty. A map, however correct, is, if no more than a common map, but a picture of a given piece of land, exhibiting its boundaries by reference to other boundaries, themselves of a fluctuating character; so that a map of Blackacre, easily identifying it to day, may be as useless for the purpose twenty years hence as the old-fashioned description of parcels. The principle that should be kept in view we take to be this, that the maps of parcels annexed to conveyances, for the purpose of an efficient registration, should be constructed on the principle of referring by measurement to a sufficient number of fixed points, previously ascertained, on the face of the country; so that whatever becomes of the existing physical marks, such as hedges, ditches, roads, or the like, constituting visible boundaries, the identity of the parcels may at all times be ascertained, if need be, by the map itself containing the means of re-constructing it. If these fixed points remained wholly to be ascertained, it would, of course, be an objection to the plan that great previous delay and expense would be incurred. But, for a large portion of the surface of the country, the existing ordnance maps, and the field-books and calculations on which they have been constructed, already afford fixed points accurately ascertained in abundance; and as to that part of the country which has not yet been subjected to the Government survey, the best existing maps would afford the means of fixing points with sufficient accuracy to be relied upon, subject to correction whenever the trigonometrical survey should be completed. If such maps were a little expensive at first—and we doubt whether their expense would be very materially greater than that of common maps—the additional expense would be soon compensated by the saving in the descriptions of parcels, if we were only to take into account the omission in successive conveyances of the long descriptions identifying by reference to occupancy; for it would be quite immaterial whether Blackacre was lately in the occupation of A., with a long name and designation, and formerly of B., with equally long ones, if one could, on any dispute, at once mark out the boundaries by measuring from fixed points, and so re-constructing the outline of the plot of ground designated in the conveyance as Blackacre.

Master in Chancery.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Hubert Smith, Gent., of Saint Leonard's, Bridgnorth, Shropshire, to be a Master Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery.

ON THE OMISSION TO GIVE NOTICE OF FILING PROCEEDINGS UNDER THE 23rd ORDER IN CHANCERY OF 1842.

The 23rd General Order in Chancery of 1842 directs, that when any solicitor or party shall cause an appearance to be entered, or an answer, demurrer, plea, or replication to be filed, he shall on the same day give notice thereof to the solicitor of the adverse party, or to the adverse party himself if he acts in person.

On this Order the question has arisen, whether the consequence of neglect to give notice entitles the party, to whom it ought to be given, to set aside the proceedings, or merely entitles him to time. In a case of Johnson v. Tucker, (11 Jur. 466), replication had been filed on the 11th March, and notice was not given till the 15th April. The Vice-Chancellor of England ordered the replication to be taken off the file. It was contended, that, if delay was caused to the defendant, he might apply for further time, and such time would be granted at the cost of the defendant. But to this the Court answered, that the plaintiff had no right, by neglecting to comply with the rules of the Court, to put the defendant to trouble, and force him to incur any, even the smallest risk of costs; and in the judgment, his Honor says, "The effect is, that the defendant may be obliged to take a course of proceeding, which, by the rules of the Court, would not have been thrust upon him if the plaintiff had given notice properly." In Wright v. Angle, (6 Hare, 107), the point came before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, also on a neglect to give notice of replication having been filed. His Honor, being referred to Johnson v. Tucker, decided, in opposition to it, that the proper course is not in general to nullify the proceeding, but to give time to the party entitled to notice at the cost of his opponent. In that case, the defendant gave notice of motion on the 29th October, to dismiss for want of prosecution; the plaintiff on the same day filed his replication, but did not give notice till the 30th. There could hardly be a case, therefore, in which the point could be tried more completely on its technical ground, because it was impossible to contend that the defendant could be, to any material extent, damnified, if time were given to him. The Vice-Chancellor said he treated the order requiring notice on the same day as directory; he did not say that special circumstances might not exist to make the course of treating the proceeding as irregular the most proper for correcting the error; but, in the case before him, his Honor saw no such circumstances. In Suffield v. Bond, (10 Beav. 331), which was cited in Johnson v. Tucker, Lord Langdale had proceeded on the same reasoning that the Vice-Chancellor adopted in Wright v. Angle. The point here arose on the filing of an answer. The plaintiff had obtained the common injunction. The defendant, on the 24th April, which was a Saturday, filed his answer, and obtained an order nisi. On the 26th he gave notice of having filed his answer. The plaintiff moved to discharge the order nisi. The Master of the Rolls, however, on the ground, that in the case before him no inconvenience had been occasioned by the omission, refused to discharge the order nisi, but made the defendant pay the costs of the application. "It is insisted," said his Lordship, "that I ought to discharge the order in all cases, whether any inconvenience has been created to the other side or not. I do not think that this is the necessary consequence of such an omission. It is quite true that if the Court relaxes its general rules, it will give rise to inconvenience, by the frequent discussions which will consequently arise; but this will be checked by the control which the Court exercises over the costs of the application. . . . . I do not intend to do anything which would imply that this General Order is not to be strictly obeyed."

The case before Lord Langdale did not decide, and does not appear by his Lordship to have been treated as deciding, the precise point raised in the other two cases. The question before Lord Langdale was not, strictly, whether the answer was irregularly filed, because the motion was not to take the answer off the file, but to discharge the order nisi. Now, the plaintiff, by thus shaping his motion, in effect waived the question of the filing of the answer being wholly a nullity, and took the opinion of the Court only upon the point whether the defendant, having neglected to give notice, did not thereby render the next step irregular.

The question, therefore, arising, strictly, on the 23rd Order of 1842, remains the subject of two conflicting decisions, and the arguments in favour of the opposite decisions are very nicely balanced. There certainly seems considerable hardship in treating a proceeding, in itself regular, as irregular, because the party taking it has omitted to give a notice, the intention of which, it may be said, is merely to enable the opposite party to take the necessary steps on his part. But, on the other hand, it may be urged, in addition to the reasons given by the Court in Johnson v. Tucker, that wherever the rules of practice limit the time for subsequent proceedings, by the party to whom notice ought to be given, if the defect is to be cured by an extension of time, the effect of the neglect of the 23rd Order is delay; and a departure from the strict application of the Order, undoes what all the more modern Orders in Chancery, addressing themselves to the times allowed in procedure, have struggled for, viz. the expediting of suits. The neglect to give notice may, if the only penalty is giving further time to the opponent, be used for the express purpose of delay; and the Court may find itself, in such cases, embarrassed by an examination of evidence to shew whether the delay must be taken to have been intentional or not. On the whole, we think it may be said that the omission to give the notice at the right time is, in the present state of the authorities, still a very dangerous omission, and one against which a prudent solicitor will take great care to guard himself.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 122,000*l.* per annum.

COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND. By Sir WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, Knt. The Twenty-second Edition. Edited by JAMES STEWART, Esq., Barrister at Law.

The peculiar features of this edition are as follow:—

1. The whole of the original text of Blackstone is preserved, after a collation with the best editions; and the original authorities have been carefully examined and verified.

2. The alterations in the law by statute and decision are incorporated into the text.

3. The arrangement of Blackstone's Commentaries is preserved, and reference is made in the side margin to the original paging; thus giving an easy mode of referring to any previous edition.

"At a time when both legal and general education is occupying the public attention to an unprecedented degree, Mr. Stewart's work is peculiarly fitted to aid the Inns of Court in their exertions to promote the study of the law, and to supply the Universities with a class-book for carrying out the system of more extended education. . . . . We have only to add, that we think Mr. Stewart has been completely successful in attaining his end."—See The Standard, Feb. 19, 1849.

LONDON, MARCH 31, 1849.

In a case reported in The Jurist of last week (Davenport v. Davenport, part 1, p. 277) was discussed the very strange equitable doctrine of relieving against trespass in the nature of waste. Before discussing the foundation of this doctrine, we will shortly state the propositions that can be deduced from the authorities; and they are these:—If I am in possession of an estate, the only or principal value whereof is in the things that grow on the soil, and a stranger comes and cuts down my trees, he may be punished for having done so, by process of law; but the Court of Chancery will not lend its assistance to prevent him from continuing the mischief, because he is a mere trespasser: but if my estate consist of a mine, and the stranger is digging my minerals, or if it consists of a stone quarry or colliery, and he is taking away the stone or coals, then the Court of Chancery will prevent him, although the act is still mere trespass; and the reason of the distinction is, that, in the instance of cutting timber, there is no destruction of the inheritance, whereas taking coal, or stone, or minerals, is taking the substance of the inheritance.

On this it may be observed en passant, that though it does not in general, and it may be it could not well, happen in practice, that any person should persist in cutting the timber on another man's estate, yet if any one should choose, from vindictive or other motives, to incur the risk of paying damage, for the trespass, nothing could prevent his cutting down all the timber on his enemy's estate, unless the owner of the estate could forcibly eject and keep him out.

The next proposition is, that if I lay claim to an estate, but am out of possession, whatever may be the vraisemblance of my claim, and whatever might be the evidence which I might be prepared to produce in support of it, if the person in possession will swear by his answer to facts or documents displacing my title, I cannot have the slightest assistance from the Court of Chancery until the hearing of the cause, or until the legal right has been determined in a court of law; and, in the meantime, the person in possession may strip the estate of every tree that graces the face of the earth. It would seem also, that, in such a case, he may even destroy the substance of the inheritance.

It is almost a prostitution of terms to speak of the principle of these doctrines, if by "principle" is meant any rule deducible from ordinary reasoning; but, using the word in the more cramped and artificial sense of legal principle, it seems to depend partly on some feudal notions of property, and partly on some arbitrary, and in our humble view exceedingly absurd, rules of Chancery proceedings. According to the feudal ideas, the land, the soil only, is the inheritance; and such things as trees were despised by our ancestors as mere chattels. Again, from the substantial importance which, during the prevalence of feudal institutions, accrued to the actual possessor of the land, followed the consequent tenderness of the law in permitting any interference with the rights of possession, until the right of any claimant out of possession (who, while out of possession, was useless as a feudal retainer) was so established by the law, that he could in fact procure the possession, and the substantial importance attached to it, for the service of his superior lord.

When the Court of Chancery came, in more modern times, to interfere for the protection of property, it adopted this rule, or, as it would be called by lawyers,

"principle" of the feudal law, and it combined with such rule the mere technical rule of its own procedure, of giving exclusive credit, on all matters of title, in any interlocutory proceeding, to the answer of the defendant. How such a rule of pleading ever came to exist, has passed the comprehension of eminent judges, and it certainly passes our much more finite understanding. It is, indeed, very difficult to understand why more credit should be given to the oath of a person interested as a defendant, than to the oath of a person interested as plaintiff; still more, why greater credit should be given to the oath of an interested defendant than to that of a disinterested witness for the plaintiff: but such unquestionably is the rule; and if I file a bill, alleging that I am entitled under the will of A., or under a settlement made by A. and B., if the defendant will take upon himself to swear that no such will or no such settlement was ever made, or that an earlier deed was made which gives him title, not all the affidavits of all the most credible persons that the country could produce, could be looked at until the hearing of the cause, or the result of a trial by ejectment.

The result of this agreeable combination is, that, to take an extreme case, though a defendant might be the most notorious liar in his county, he would have a period, ranging from six months to two years, during which he might, without the possibility of hindrance, utterly strip of all its timber an estate, the title to which might turn out ultimately not to be in him. That such is the state of the law has been decided with great reluctance, but, we believe, most correctly, in the case referred to, of Davenport v. Davenport; but that such a state of the law is an intolerable abomination, must, we think, be apparent to any one who considers it carefully. It rests entirely, as we have said, upon the arbitrary rule of pleading, and the feudal contempt, in regard to real estate, of everything in the nature of a mere chattel.

When the title to personal property is in dispute, although the rule of pleading is maintained in full force, its application becomes mostly harmless, because there arises, almost of necessity, the compensating rule, which is applied even in regard of real estate, if the injury threatened is destructive of the substance of the property in litigation. If, for instance, I claim the title to a mere chattel, which is in the possession of A., A. will be restrained from destroying or parting with it, just as he would be restrained from digging out coal from a colliery, and that, in either case, although he denies my title; and the only reason why timber, and other things which grow out of the land, are not so protected, seems to be, that they are not actually what is termed the inheritance. In the language of common sense, they are, however, as much part of the inheritance as the land itself; they are, at any rate, incidents, and sometimes the most valuable incidents, to property: and we conceive, that, if a country gentleman were told, that, by stripping his estate of all its timber, his inheritance would not be injured, he might well be justified in saying, that such a doctrine would be very bad sense, though it might be very good law.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25*s.* boards,

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the "Common-law Commissioners" suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develope. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on "Modern Pleading," as incident to the above "rules," and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy "reports." The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuriâ in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1834.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

LONDON, APRIL 7, 1849.

The Pawnbrokers Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, was passed, it need scarcely be mentioned, at a period when no interest beyond 5*l.* per cent. could be taken lawfully on any security whatever, real or personal. It enabled pawnbrokers to take from persons pledging goods or chattels, certain profits upon the sums which had been lent, before the pawnbroker should be obliged to re-deliver the pledge; and the limit of interest, and of the sum upon which such interest might be taken on the largest separate transaction, was fixed in the following words: "And for every pledge upon which there shall have been lent any sum exceeding 40*s.* and not exceeding 10*l.*, at and after the rate of 3*d.*, and no more, for the loan of every 20*s.* for all such money so lent, by the calendar month, including the current month, and so in proportion for any fractional sum, which said several sums shall be taken in lieu of, and as a full satisfaction for, all interest due and charges for warehouse room."

The rate of interest fixed by this act is, it will be perceived, 15*l.* per cent. per annum. It is perfectly clear, that, at common law, a pawnbroker, who is merely one who makes it his trade to lend money upon pledges, might lend money to any amount on pledge of chattels, and with any agreement as to time for the repayment of the money, provided the agreement was to take only lawful interest. With this right the 39 & 40 Geo. 3 does not interfere. It does not prohibit a pawnbroker from lending any amount of money upon what was then lawful interest, viz. 5*l.* per cent. It does require him to pursue certain forms as to entering his transactions into books, and delivering to the persons pawning, a certain kind of memorandum, which is known to the public by the term "duplicate." Perhaps it might be questioned, whether a pawnbroker might at all transact loans upon pledges of chattels, without complying with the formalities prescribed by the act with respect to the making of the entries and delivering the notes described in the 6th section. But, however that may be, there is certainly no clause in the act which limits the extent of the transactions a pawnbroker may enter into, if lawful interest only is reserved. What the passage cited from the 2nd section does, is not to restrict, but to enable. It enables the pawnbroker, not to lend on pledge, which he might do without, but to lend in sums not exceeding 10*l.*, reserving 15*l.* per cent. per annum, which he could not have done without, the statute.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37, the law is altered with regard to what is lawful interest; and, by that act, no contract for the loan of money above 10*l.* is void on the ground of usury, whatever may be the interest reserved, provided the security be not any estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments: in other words, it is now lawful to lend money above 10*l.* upon any personal security, at any rate of interest parties may think fit to agree upon. The 3rd section of this act guards it against repealing or affecting any statute relating to pawnbrokers, and preserves all laws touching and concerning pawnbrokers in full force and effect.

Now, upon these two statutes, it has lately been held, (Fitch v. Rochfort, V. C. E., 4th April, 1849), that a transaction between a borrower and a pawnbroker, where the sum lent exceeded 10*l.*, (it was, in fact, many hundreds), and the interest reserved was 15*l.* per cent., was illegal, on the ground that the form and nature of the instruments, constituting the agreement between the parties, shewed the transaction to be a pawnbroker's transaction. We have not had the advantage of seeing the papers, but we believe the circumstances from which this inference was drawn were, that though the agreement contained terms beyond those that would flow from the mere transaction under the Pawnbrokers Act, as to the time of repayment and power of sale, (the excess being, however, for the advantage of the borrower), yet the transaction was entered in the pawnbroker's regular books, and a memorandum, or some document in the nature of a duplicate, consistent with the terms of the Pawnbrokers Act, was delivered.

It may be a question, if the question were material, whether the adoption of any particular form of contract or course of procedure, could be used to put a construction upon an act which might be lawful, for the purpose of shewing it was intended to bear a certain character which would make it unlawful. No doubt persons may attempt to use an instrument, for a purpose appearing to be lawful upon the face of the instrument, for an unlawful purpose, the secret agreement being, that it is to be used for the unlawful purpose; as in the case of conveyances to give colourable qualifications. But if a person may, as pawnbroker, do certain things, and no others, but may, out of his character of pawnbroker, lawfully do those other things, is it consistent with the principles of the law to collect, from anything short of actual declaration of intention, that he intended to do the act in the very character in which it would be unlawful? Can such an inference, at any rate, be drawn from the mere circumstance of the adoption of a form of contract used by the pawnbroker in his admittedly lawful transactions?

But the more material question is, whether, admitting the transaction to be a pawnbroking transaction—that is, a transaction by a pawnbroker in the way of his trade—the decision in Fitch v. Rochfort can be supported. If, as we conceive is clear, the 39 & 40 Geo. 3 merely enables a pawnbroker to take 15*l.* per cent. upon transactions not exceeding 10*l.*, and requires him to pursue certain forms in all his pawnbroking transactions, and leaves altogether untouched his common-law right to effect loans to any amount at ordinary interest, it is plain that the question upon the legality of his transactions was not, under that statute at least, whether they were pawnbroking transactions or not, but whether he agreed for lawful interest or not. If he agreed for more than 15*l.* per cent. on a loan of 10*l.*, or for more than 5*l.* per cent. upon any larger loan, his transaction would be unlawful, whether it was called, or whether it was or not, a pawnbroking transaction; and if he confined himself to the interest which was rendered lawful by the statute for loans of 10*l.*, and to the interest on larger loans, which, being lawful before, was not rendered unlawful by the statute, it could be of no consequence whether the transaction was in his shop or out of it—in the course of his trade or otherwise—it would in either case be lawful. If that is so, how does the 2 & 3 Vict. affect the question? By the 1st section of that statute, any person, pawnbroker or not pawnbroker, may agree for any amount of interest on any loan exceeding 10*l.*, secured upon any kind of personal security—of course, among others, upon any deposit of any chattel. The 3rd section prevents the repealing of the Pawnbrokers Act. What it does, therefore, is this: it leaves it lawful for pawnbrokers to take 15*l.* per cent., and no more, as prescribed by the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, upon loans of 10*l.*, and it leaves subsisting the silence of the Pawnbrokers Act as to the interest which may be taken by a pawnbroker upon loans above 10*l.* It leaves him, therefore, at liberty to do what, at common law or by the statute law, is left lawful by the 39 & 40 Geo. 3; that is, to take any amount of interest on any loan exceeding 10*l.* We submit, with great deference to the high authority of the learned judge who decided Fitch v. Rochfort, that this is the true construction of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3 and 2 & 3 Vict.; and that it is quite immaterial what be the form of the contract between the pawner and pawnbroker, except in so far as it may be material, for the purpose of avoiding penalties, that the pawnbroker should comply with the formalities prescribed by the 6th and subsequent sections of the Pawnbrokers Act.

CASES UPON THE 11 & 12 VICT. c. 45.

Since the passing of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 45) several important cases have been decided under it, and it may be convenient to our readers to have them brought together and considered.

The first question is, what companies are within the act; and this has been discussed in several cases before his Honor the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. In The Herne-bay Pier Company's case, (12 Jur. pt. 1, p. 1064), the company was formed for the purpose of making a pier or jetty for landing goods and passengers. It had power to make landing-places, quays, &c.; to erect toll-gates, &c.; and to take tolls. It did not appear that it had or contemplated any other business than that of affording landing accommodation for goods and passengers from vessels, and taking tolls therefor. The Court thought it not clear that the company was within the meaning of the act; and that the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised except in reference to companies clearly and beyond all doubt within the meaning of the act. The next case is that of The Agricultural Cattle Insurance Company, (13 Jur., part 1, 75). In that case the company was formed for the purpose of insuring against the losses arising by mortality among all kinds and descriptions of animals. The Court held, as in the case first referred to, that the act was not to be applied except in cases which are clearly within its scope, and free from difficulty; and the petition was dismissed.

These cases seem to call for no observation. Unquestionably, taking tolls for the landing of passengers or the like, or taking premiums for insuring against any contingency, has never been considered a strictly commercial or trading occupation, although it may be a profitable business; and it would require a considerable stretch of imagination to fix upon companies of either of the kinds referred to in the above-mentioned cases, the character of companies formed for commercial or trading purposes.

The next case that was decided is The London and Manchester Direct Independent Railway Company's case, (13 Jur. part 1, 182). In that, the company was an uncompleted railway company—that is, a company formed for constructing and working a railway, but not carried beyond the formation of the company and the allotment of shares, &c.; in fact, not carried to the point of obtaining, or even applying for, the sanction o the Legislature. The Court declined to apply the at f of Parliament to such an association, intimating again that the Court was only to put the law in force in a case to which the Legislature had plainly and distinctly said that it should apply. On this case, we believe, an appeal is pending; and as we commented upon the doctrine involved in it, in a preceding page of this journal, (ante, p. 61), before we knew that the case was under appeal, we shall not now observe upon it, further than to say this—that as the object of the Legislature was, undoubtedly, to enable the parties to associations, whose business was not worth being carried on, to wind them up without a suit; and as, at the time when the act was passed, by far the greater part of such associations consisted of railway companies wholly or partially formed, it will be a singular miscarriage of the Legislature, if precisely that class of associations shall be found to be excluded from the operation of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act.

In Ex parte Wyld (13 Jur. part 1, p. 133) the question decided was, that a mining company, formed on the "cost-book" principle before the passing of the act, is not within its operation. The construction of the statute is, that the second clause is confined in its operation by the first, and merely adds to the description of the companies which are to be affected by the description and operation of the first clause.

The next question is, who is a contributory, and what is the intention of the act with regard to the liabilities of the members of an association which is within it? And it has been decided, on the latter point, that the act does not touch the question of liability to third parties, but only the liabilities of the members inter se. (Ex parte Fenwick, re The North of England Joint-stock Banking Company, 13 Jur. part 1, 204).

As to what makes a party a contributory, the following cases have been decided:—A father bought shares for and in the name of his son, who was a minor. The vendor declared, pursuant to the rules of the company, that the purchaser was of age, and the purchaser entered into a deed containing the usual covenants with respect to the shares; afterwards, the father, by deed with the company, reciting the purchase of the shares for his son, covenanted that he should, on coming of age, execute the deed of settlement, and in the meantime fulfil all his liabilities. The father received all the dividends. It was held, that the father was a contributory, although the son was the person registered in the books of the company. (Ex parte Reaveley, re The North of England Joint-stock Bank, 12 Jur. part 1, 1065). The ground of the decision was, that the father had contracted with the company; and when that circumstance did not exist, but there was merely a purchase of shares for sons with the father's money, and the shares were taken in the name of a trustee, whose name alone was registered as a shareholder, the Court held the father not a contributory, although there was an agreement between the father and the trustee that the dividends and profits should be paid to the father during the minority of the sons. By the same instrument, it was agreed, that, on their attaining their ages, the shares were to be transferred to the sons; and the father indemnified the trustee against liability in respect of the said shares.

As to the circumstances that give rise to the application of the act generally, this point has been considered in two cases—Ex parte Wyld, above cited, and Ex parte Troutbeck, (13 Jur. part 1, p. 157). In the former case it was held, that the act is not intended to apply to the case of a solvent company, or a company that can carry on its affairs, merely to settle a quarrel between an individual shareholder and the company, although the company may, in point of form, have acted so as to be within the 5th article of the 5th section of the statute. The act is intended to enable companies that are insolvent, or that for other reasons cannot go on, to be wound up, and the conditions of the 5th section are intended as tests of that insolvency or incapacity; and, therefore, in the case secondly referred to, Ex parte Troutbeck, the act was held to apply, although there were no outstanding debts, and there was a decree for an account and contribution in a suit in equity, on the ground that the company could not go on; and that the very thing the act intended, was to afford a company in such a position, the means of avoiding the insurmountable difficulties attending the winding-up by a suit in Chancery.

LONDON, APRIL 14, 1849.

From the remarks that fell not long ago in the House of Commons, from one of the most eminent persons in that assembly, we are led to anticipate the possibility—would that we could say the proximate probability—of a substantial reform in the procedure of the Court of Chancery.

That such a reform is becoming every year more and more requisite, for the interest both of the public and of the Profession, is quite plain. The public has been gradually, and with reason, acquiring the conviction, that the relief to be obtained by going into Chancery is purchased at so great a sacrifice, that the remedy is frequently more terrible than the evil against which relief is sought. Hence, injustice is commonly submitted to in preference to resorting to the dreaded Court of Chancery; and a jurisdiction, founded on the highest and purest principles of justice, has become comparatively useless.

There is nothing in the principles of equitable jurisdiction which necessarily involves practical consequences so fatal to their application. The leading distinction between the principles of equity and common-law jurisdiction, so far as they are distinct, is, that equity prevents the commission of wrongful acts, or enforces the performance of those that, in equity and justice, ought to be done, but gives no compensation for a wrong actually done; while the common law gives a remedy, by way of compensation, for a wrong done; but neither prevents the doing of a wrong, nor enforces the performance of a duty.

The leading distinction between the procedures of the two jurisdictions is, that in equity, firstly, the whole facts of the case are put in detail in writing, and the whole evidence is also taken in writing; and, secondly, the defendant is examined as to matters affecting his own interest: while at law the defendant cannot be so examined, and the heads only of the case are put in writing, the evidence being all brought out vivâ voce. How the two systems of judicature came to be separated, and intrusted to distinct tribunals, is of little consequence. They have become so, and there seems no reason of convenience for forcibly consolidating them. It is obvious—at any rate, we shall take it for admitted—that each system is necessary for administering justice in the complicated state of property which exists in this country; but it is not less obvious, that, to be worth anything to the public, each system must be conducted in such a manner as to bring it within the reach of those whose rights of property require its interference.

It is certain that the system of equitable jurisdiction is not so conducted. No doubt there is an immense number of cases in which the magnitude of the interests at stake, and the wealth of the contending parties, make the costliness and delay of proceedings in Chancery, little felt. But the mass of the litigation of a commercial community relates to subjects of contest of moderate amount; and, for such subjects, the cost of equitable litigation is out of all reasonable proportion to the value of the subject-matter.

Of the beneficial operation of the system of examining a defendant, for the purpose of detecting fraud, there can be no manner of doubt; and that, for the purpose of working out such a jurisdiction, a procedure by writing, minutely stating the case, is essential both for the examination and the protection of the person charged, is also clear; because, to bring against a defendant sudden accusations of fraud, and a mass of inculpatory statements, and to call upon him to answer them without previous thought and preparation, would be productive of infinite oppression; and, on the other hand, unless the plaintiff has time coolly to consider the story told by the defendant, in order to detect fallacies in its reasoning or inaccuracies in its facts, the searching power of equity would be but of little value. But these reasons apply to the single case of the defendant being examined as to matters affecting his own interest. As to every other branch of equity procedure, there seems no more necessity for everything being done at length in writing, than in proceedings at common law. It is not at all meant to be asserted, that precision in the statement of the claims of the parties, whether of the plaintiff or the defendant, is not requisite in equity proceedings; but the necessary precision fixes the limit of the necessary amount of written pleadings in equity as well as at law. All beyond that, is mere waste of time, and a mischievous increase of expense.

The first step, therefore, in substantial Chancery reform, would be to revise the whole system of pleading, with a view to abolish the length of the written pleadings, wherever that can be done consistently with the preservation of the essential qualities of an equitable jurisdiction.

To consider this part of the subject, it is necessary to go a little into details.

The initiated know, and the uninitiated may hereby learn, that every suit in Chancery commences by a bill, which is a minute statement in writing of the whole of the plaintiff's case; that is, of all the facts, and of the substance at least of all the documents, under which he claims a right against the defendant. The statement is followed by interrogatories as to every one of the matters alleged, inquiring of the defendant, in the most involved form of expression that art can contrive, whether each such matter, or something relating to it, is or is not true. This is the substance of a bill in Chancery; and as nothing can be asked of the defendant or proved, unless it be founded on the statements of the bill, it follows that the draftsman, if he wishes to guard against surprise, must add, in many cases, statements of a variety of imaginary circumstances, in order to elicit admissions of possible facts. To this an answer, minutely answering every interrogatory, must be given in writing; the facts on which each party relies are then to be proved by witnesses, examined upon written interrogatories, and answering in writing. It is not going too far to say, that, by reason of the forms of language adopted in interrogating a defendant, and of the rules of pleading affecting the defendant's liability to answer every question completely, on an average every question put by a bill in Chancery (in a contested case) is unavoidably answered twice over; we do not mean, of course, twice in substance, but twice in point of quantity of words used.

Now, we hesitate not to say, that, probably in every case, but certainly in all except a few excepted cases, a very short statement of facts would be sufficient (if sanctioned by the rules of practice) on behalf of a plaintiff; and no interrogatories at all would be requisite. And we further assert, that in no case whatever is there any advantage in examining the witnesses upon written interrogatories; at least, not upon interrogatories framed in the complex manner adopted in Chancery.

To commence at once with the most difficult class of cases, viz. that in which both the facts and the law are in contest, all that is requisite in the commencement of the litigation is, that the material facts alleged on both sides, and the points of law raised or raiseable, should be presented to the Court; and that may be done in a much simpler and shorter form than by bill and answer, without any loss of precision.

The plaintiff might concisely state his facts, and what he claims, by a petition, referring to, not incorporating, the documents intended to be relied on, and of which he should be bound to give inspection. On filing his petition he should be required to give notice to the defendant of the facts in support of which he intends to produce evidence. The petition, or statement of facts of the plaintiff, should be accompanied by no interrogatories whatever. If the plaintiff desired discovery from the defendant, he might give notice to that effect; and then, but not otherwise, the defendant should be bound to put in a written answer to the statements, as complete as if he had been specifically and technically interrogated. If the defendant did not answer satisfactorily, the plaintiff might then be at liberty to except, as he does now; and if successful on the exceptions, then, and not otherwise, he might be at liberty to present written interrogatories to the defendant, who could not complain of his expense being increased, if he had caused it by his own wilful neglect or carelessness. Whether the plaintiff required discovery from the defendant or not, he should be bound to give him notice of the facts on which he intended to go into evidence. If the defendant was not called upon to give discovery, he should be at liberty either simply to deny the truth of the whole statement of facts, or of any separate statement or group of statements; or so denying the whole or a part of the statement of facts, to make also any counter-statement of facts, giving notice of the positive counter-statements on which he intended to go into evidence. Then, upon this state of the pleadings, the cause might be heard, each party producing in support of his case, witnesses to be examined vivâ voce, as at law. This state of pleadings would correspond to, and we believe answer all the purposes of, the present bill, with its charges and interrogatories; of the answer, with its traverses and counter-statements; of the written interrogatories administered to witnesses, and their written depositions; and we have no manner of doubt that it would, under the regulations which it would warrant, as to time allowed in procedure, reduce the time expended in, and the cost expended upon, Chancery proceedings, from 50 to 75 per cent. Whether expense and time would be saved by bringing up and examining witnesses in open court, or whether it would be better to examine them before a separate officer such as the Examiner, and to take their written depositions into court, is a question rather of statistics than of reasoning. The great point is to abolish the written interrogatories, and to examine the witnesses vivâ voce. We are, of course, stating only the broad outline of a system of pleading capable of being substituted for the present system of equity pleading. We have not here space, nor is it yet the proper time, for entering into the suggestions for the details of all the intermediate proceedings which may be requisite for the complete administration of equitable justice—such as the enforcing of the production of papers, the appointing of receivers, the granting of injunctions, &c.; nor for the prosecution of such inquiries as may, under any system of pleading and practice, be found requisite to bring before the Court all parties who may be entitled to claim, and all accounts in respect of which the Court may be required to adjudicate. Suffice it, on this part of the subject, to say, that we shall be found ready, in this Journal, to afford any aid to Chancery reform, which such practical knowledge as we possess may enable us to give, in making suggestions in reference to details, as well as in reference to principles. All that at present we are anxious to urge is, that the vitality of equity depends on its principles, not on the particular existing form of pleading, which may have been dictated originally by its utility, but which has now become, under changed circumstances, an intolerable burthen; and that equity may be administered with as little of lengthy writing as law. We are well aware, that, even at this day, our views, and the views of any who swear not by bills and answers and written interrogatories, will meet with great opposition, and probably some ridicule. It will be said, too, perhaps, that the very plan we propose to substitute is, after all, a bill and answer; and that, if we admit that the facts of a case must be stated with precision, and in writing, we admit the necessity of the existing system. The answer is, that there will be a wide distinction in results between a system, the governing rule of which is, that you must state everything in detail in writing, and get an answer to everything in detail in writing, so that the evidence shall be nothing but an echo of the pleadings; and one under which you are to state only, in writing, the substance of the facts, or, as it were, the heads of your case, and to establish your case by evidence brought out, as vivâ voce evidence is at law, and in all common business transactions, by a series of questions consistent with, but not to be found in, the written pleadings.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

To the library of the landlord they constitute a desirable acquisition: to that of the lawyer they are a necessity; and, even at the peril of adding to its bulk, or of displacing some well-thumbed edition of Woodfall or Gilbert on Leases, we would strongly recommend them to the Profession. In conclusion, therefore, we would express our hearty approval of the volumes now before us, and congratulate the author on the successful termination of those labours, which, having been protracted like those of Alcmena, have terminated in the birth of a Hercules."—The Times, Dec. 26, 1848.

LONDON, APRIL 21, 1849.

The Court of Exchequer have decided, in the recent case of Morley v. Attenborough, (13 Jur. 282), that, as a general rule, there is no implied warranty of title by a vendor of goods. The facts which led to this judgment may be thus briefly stated:—The plaintiff purchased a harp, sold as an unredeemed pledge by the defendant, who was a pawnbroker. It afterwards appearing that the harp had been wrongfully pawned, the plaintiff restored it to the true owner and now brought an action on promises against the defendant, on an implied warranty of title.

The Court held that such action could not be maintained, and laid down the following rules:—That there is no such implied warranty by the vendor of goods, unless it arise from the nature of the trade in the course of which they are sold, e. g. goods sold by a shopkeeper, or unless there be a usage to that effect in the particular trade. That, in other cases, for the vendee to recover for defect of title, there must be an express warranty (and an affirmation of title is equivalent thereto) or fraud. The Court also intimated, that if the subject-matter was not in esse at the time of the contract, as in the case of a sale of goods to be manufactured, a warranty would, probably, be implied; and that although there was no warranty, either express or by implication, yet if it could be shewn to have been understood by the parties that the bargain should be rescinded in the event of absence of title in the seller, the price might be recovered, as upon a consideration that had failed.

The judgment proceeded partly on a supposed analogy between warranty of title and of quality, and partly on a few decisions and dicta bearing upon the subject. The analogy is deficient in some respects—as, for instance, a shopkeeper does not warrant the quality of goods sold by him, though, as we have seen, he is now to be considered as warranting the title. The principle also to be deduced from former decisions upon the subject of implied warranty of the quality of goods, or of title to land, appears to be, that, where a party has the means of exercising his own judgment on the matter, there is no implication of warranty,—cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis,—but that it exists where he has not such means, or must rely upon the judgment of the other party. (See Brown v. Edgington, 2 Scott, N. R., 504, per Tindal, C. J.) Thus, on the sale of lands, the implied warranty of title is excluded, because the title-deeds go with the land, and the purchaser can, therefore, judge for himself of the title, and must see to it at his peril. (Rowsel v. Vaughan, Cro. Jac. 196). But a lessor impliedly warrants his title to demise because the lessee has not the title-deeds with the demised premises. A like distinction, founded on the same principle, prevails between the sale of a specific chattel in esse and of goods to be manufactured or sold in the bulk, where the vendee has no opportunity of examining them, as in the case of goods sold at sea, or of goods sold by sample. (See Gray v. Cox, 4 B. & C. 108; Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 533; Brown v. Edgington, 2 M. & G. 279). Applying this principle to the question before us, it would seem to determine that the maxim of caveat emptor should not be applicable to the title of a vendor of goods, (and see per Pollock, C. B., Allen v. Hopkins, 13 Mee. & W. 94), for the vendee has not the means of ascertaining, by an exercise of his own judgment, the title of the vendor; it is a subject within the knowledge of the vendor alone. The defect, if any, is not patent on the goods, nor are there title-deeds from which it may be discovered. To say that the vendee may inquire of the vendor as to his title, is only to say that he may have an express warranty, but does not shew that he has the power of exercising his own judgment on the subject, in the sense which renders him amenable to the maxim of caveat emptor. The argument that the vendee might easily have obtained an express warranty, and that, therefore, no warranty should be implied, would equally apply to all other cases where an implied warranty is held to arise; for it is difficult to conceive any case in which the vendee might not as easily require an express warranty of the quality of goods as he could an affirmation, i. e. an express warranty of title. The following are the authorities on which the judgment is ostensibly founded:—

Lord Coke, (Co. Litt. 102), treating of a voucher to warranty of title to land, says, "Note, that, by the civil law, every man is bound to warrant the thing that he selleth or conveyeth, albeit there be no express warranty; but the common law bindeth him not, unless there be a warranty, in deed or in law, for caveat emptor." If, by warranty "in law," he means a tacit or implied warranty, as the word is elsewhere defined by him, (Co. Litt. 365. a., 384. a.), then the passage amounts to this—that the common law binds to warranty only where such warranty is express or implied, and it has no weight on the question one way or the other. Whatever its meaning, the reason given is not very satisfactory; and it appears doubtful whether the words do not refer solely to the warranty of title to land. Lord Coke does not cite any authority for his opinion; and the cases subsequently placed on the margin by the annotators refer to warranty of quality only.

A note in 3 Rep. 22 a, asserts, there is no warranty of title in the sale of goods, and cites for this position the above passage from Co. Litt.

Noy's Maxims, c. 42: "If I take the horse of another man, and sell him, and the owner take him again, I may have an action of debt for the money; for the bargain was perfect by the delivery of the horse; and caveat emptor." Here, again, the reason given is a mere assertion; the law, as stated by Noy, seems to be intended for the special emolument of horse-stealers; but, putting that aside, it would not be law at the present day, if it was the understanding of the parties that the bargain should be rescinded in the event of the vendor not having title. It appears to us, that such an understanding might be implied, unless the contrary were expressed, for a man seldom intends to part with his money for nothing; but the Court of Exchequer seem to have considered that this intention should be proved at the trial.

Fitz. Nat. Brev. 94, (E), refers only to warranty of quality, e. g. soundness of horse and goodness of wine, "for the purchaser's eyes and his taste ought to be his judges in that case."

Sprigwell v. Allen (Al. 91) was an action on the case for falsely and fraudulently selling a horse to the plaintiff, ubi revera it was the horse of another; and the action was held not to be maintainable, because the plaintiff could not prove the scienter; "for the declaration must be, that he did it fraudulently, or knowing it not to be his own horse, for the defendant bought the horse in Smithfield, but not legally tolled." (And see S. C., in note to 2 East, 448). It will be observed that this was an action for deceit, and not for a breach of warranty.

Early v. Garret (9 B. & C. 932) was a case of sale of land, "with all faults and defects."

Williamson v. Allison (2 East, 448) was a case of express warranty of quality.

Desring v. Farrington (3 Keb. 304) was an action of covenant for a sum of money, which the defendant had received, and not paid over, according to his agreement.

As suggested by Baron Parke, the old rule of law may have been against a warranty of title on sales of goods, because such sales took place in markets and fairs where a bonâ fide purchaser without notice obtained a good title against every one except the Crown. Such a reason, however, is no longer applicable; and, according to the maxim, "Cessante ratione legis cessat et ipsa lex," the cases founded thereon at all events lose much of their weight.

It should also be observed that it does not appear to have been necessary, for the decision of this particular case, that the Court should have pronounced judgment on the general question, as the plaintiff, having purchased the harp as an unredeemed pledge, was affected by notice of a qualified title in the vendor.

A warranty of title in the vendor of goods was implied by the civil law, and is implied by the law of France, and generally in America. If such a doctrine be not a part of the law of England, it may be worthy of consideration whether it ought not to be adopted. It is, doubtless, the policy of our law not to interfere more than is necessary with matters of contract, nor to check the exercise of vigilance by the parties interested; but it is also part of its policy to protect the public from fraudulent sales and wrongful assumptions of title.

Mr. Bright says, that his work originated in a joint undertaking by Mr. Spence, Q. C., and himself to edit Roper's Treatise, which was abandoned in consequence of Mr. Spence's other engagements. Mr. Bright, after working for some time alone, found that he could not edit Roper satisfactorily, because much was obsolete, "and also from certain defects which appeared to exist in Mr. Roper's arrangement, as well as in his selection

'of materials, much of which related to subjects not 'properly belonging to the law of husband and wife, 'and better discussed by other writers." Under these circumstances he has attempted "to construct a new 'treatise, for which Mr. Roper's book has been taken 'as the basis." "The work," it is added, "claims to 'have a value which no other treatise on the same 'subject can possess, inasmuch as it contains the whole 'of Mr. Jacob's notes and contributions to his edition 'of Roper, which have been either embodied in the 'text or inserted in the appendix." But half of this value has been sacrificed, as to the notes which are incorporated in the text, by the omission to distinguish Mr. Jacob's matter from Mr. Bright's, or either from Mr. Roper's. Mr. Jacob's name is a tower of strength, and most readers would be too glad to trust to it rather than to their own judgment, by which, of course, whatever may be Mr. Bright's own matter must be estimated.

We do not understand the theory of this proceeding. Either Mr. Roper's matter is good or it is bad. If it is bad, and badly selected and arranged, a good treatise cannot be "founded" on it. If it is good, it is not just to Mr. Roper's memory to use his work and put another name to the result; still less is it justifiable to appropriate Mr. Jacob's valuable notes without (in the majority of instances) any acknowledgment beyond the general one which we have quoted. Any faults in Mr. Roper's arrangement might have been corrected—any excrescences pruned—any obsolete matter omitted, without destroying the identity and name of his work. Of this fairer and more modest course Mr. Bright had an example in the excellent edition of Woodfall's Treatise on Landlord and Tenant, "remodelled and enlarged" by Messrs. Harrison & Wollaston. In its present form, the book looks like an attempt by the editor to found a reputation on the ruins of Mr. Roper's, which he decries while he uses it as an introduction for himself.

We do not think that Mr. Roper's book contains much irrelevant matter. The heads of the contents and the arrangement are as follows:—

Rights of husband in, and power over, his wife's real estates: 1. Curtesy. 2. Discontinuance, remitter, and forfeiture. 3. Leases. 4. Charges by husband on his wife's real estates. Rights of husband in, and power over, his wife's personal estate: 5. Wife's personal estate in possession, in action, and in autre droit. 6. Wife's personal estate in remainder or expectancy. 7. Wife's equity to a settlement. 8. Settlements before and after marriage, their validity against purchasers and creditors, &c. Rights of wife in her husband's real estates: 9. Dower. 10. Jointure. 11. Bar of dower otherwise than by jointure. 12. Wife's power over her husband's real estates (alienations by doweresses and jointresses). 13. Rights of wife in husband's personal estate. 14. Husband's covenants to leave or settle personal estate on wife, &c. 15. Effects of marriage on the prior acts and agreements of husband and wife. 16. The disabilities of coverture. 17. Gifts and allowances by husband to wife. 18, 19, 20. Wife's separate property. 21. Restraint on anticipation. 22. Separation.

Such are the contents and arrangement of Mr. Roper's Treatise. We see nothing redundant in the one, or defective in the other. There is, indeed, in the 16th chapter, a general dissertation on powers, occupying about six pages, which may be considered disproportionate to the rest of the work; but we do not remember another instance of the kind.

Mr. Bright's divisions are more elaborate. After an introductory dissertation on the marriage contract, comes—

Book I. On the general rights, liabilities, and disabilities arising out of the relation of husband and wife. 1. Effect of marriage on prior acts and agreements [not including the question as to the efficacy and extent of the consideration of marriage]. 2. Limitations to husband and wife, by entireties, &c. 3. Gifts between husband and wife. 4. Husband's interest in wife's personalty. 5. Reduction into possession of wife's choses en action. 6. Releases and assignments of wife's choses en action. 7. Wife's consent to vesting her equitable choses in husband. 8. Wife's chattels real. 9. Husband's interest in wife's freeholds for life, and estate of inheritance before birth of issue. 10. Curtesy. 11. Husband's power over wife's real estates. 12. Leases by husband of wife's estates. 13. Settlements fraudulent against husband. 14. Wife's equity to a settlement out of her own property. [Here we rub our eyes, and inquire why the effect of a wife's consent to dispositions of her property is to be considered before her right to a settlement, the subjects of curtesy, leases, &c. intervening? Mr. Roper's defective arrangement has no flaw so glaring as this.] 15. Maintenance of wife out of her own property, when husband deserts or is unable to maintain her. 16. Exoneration and redemption of wife's estates mortgaged for her husband. 17. Paraphernalia. 18. Wife's interest in husband's personalty, under Statute of Distributions and by custom. 19. Dower. 20. Bar of dower by jointure. 21. Bar of dower by other means. 22. Husband's liability for wife's debts and contracts. 23. Devastavit where wife is executrix. 24. Disabilities of coverture. 25. Rights of wife who has eloped and committed adultery.

Book II. Of certain rights acquired by the husband or wife, by settlement or contract. 1. Purchase by husband of wife's choses, by a settlement. 2. Wife's rights under post-nuptial settlement against creditors. 3. Proof on behalf of wife when husband becomes bankrupt. 4. Settlement in fraud of bankrupt laws. 5. Settlements where wife is infant. 6. Covenant by husband to leave or settle personal estate. 7. Covenant to settle wife's future property. 8. Limitations to "next of kin," &c. of husband or wife.

Book III. Of the wife's separate estate. [Is not this a right acquired by settlement?] 1. How created. 2. Wife's power of disposition. 3. When wife takes absolute interest in, or a mere power to appoint, the capital. 4. Liability of separate estate to wife's debts and contracts, and of her separate character. 5. Wife's acts and acquiescence respecting her separate estate, in regard to her husband. 6. Wife's title to relief against her separate contracts. [Surely this is a part of Chap. 2.] 7. Restraint on anticipation. 8. Pin-money. 9. Wife's separate trading and savings.

Book IV. Of separation between husband and wife, (for the details of which we have not space).

From the above summary our readers will learn the scope of Mr. Bright's book. We see here no notable improvement on Roper's arrangement. There are, however, some new topics of interest; and some subjects of importance, which Roper had slurred over, are fully treated by Mr. Bright. Add to this, that the cases and enactments subsequent to 1826 have been collected and incorporated with considerable industry and accuracy, and it will be seen that Mr. Bright's editorial labours and merit have not been slight. The cases are stated succinctly, and the text is clear and intelligible, so that the work is very useful for reference, and as a guide to the cases: it would have been more so if the publisher's economy had not deprived it of the valuable adjunct of side-notes to the paragraphs. But to the character of a critical treatise on the principles of the law, the book has no other pretensions than those which are founded on the matter taken from Jacob's Roper. Mr. Bright has generally been contented to state the cases as he found them, and has shewn little anxiety to extract general principles from them, or to analyse apparently conflicting cases, and display the distinctions by which they may be reconciled, or to weigh the relative values of those which are really in conflict. In consequence of this neglect of criticism, Mr. Bright sometimes overlooks decisions really bearing on the question in hand, and sometimes fails to notice errors in reports which a more wakeful perusal of them might detect. Thus, in vol. 1, p. 122, he follows Mr. Roper, in citing Sumner v. Partridge (2 Atk. 47) as an authority for the point which was long after unexceptionably decided in Barker v. Barker, (2 Sim. 249), without perceiving (though he states the limitations) that the not very able judge who decided the earlier case had entirely mistaken the effect of the limitations, which raised not the point intended to be decided, but the very different point decided the other way in Buckworth v. Thirkell. Again, at p. 98, after stating that the husband may, at law, assign his wife's term, and defeat her interest by survivorship, he adds, that the same rule prevails in equity, and was first settled, by the House of Lords, in Sir E. Turner's case, (1 Vern. 7; 1 Ch. Cas. 307). He also cites as an authority Tudor v. Samyne, which, in 2 Vern. 270, is stated as an erroneous decision against the validity of future trusts for separate use, while, by an imperfect statement from the Registrar's book, (4 My. & C. 389, n.), it appears not to have concerned separate estate at all, but which does not appear, from either report, to have decided the point in question; for, if the note in 4 My. & C. 389, is correct, the wife had only a life interest in the term. (See Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Mad. 155; Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 175; Stiffe v. Everett, 1 My. & C. 41). The doctrine commonly supposed to have been decided in Turner's case is plainly anomalous, and untenable in principle; and this, with the obscurity of the reports, having suggested to Mr. Macqueen's mind that the case might possibly have been misreported, the result has been an examination of the Lords' Journals, and other sources of information, (see Macqueen on Husband and Wife, 82), which shew that there is no evidence that the point was ever discussed in that case. See, too, Sturges v. Champneys, (5 My. & C. 97), where Lord Cottenham treated Turner's case as of no authority, and expressly decided the contrary to Mr. Bright's proposition. And this decision was followed in Hanson v. Keating, (4 Hare, 1); Freeman v. Fairlie, (11 Jur. 447); Newenham v. Pemberton, (Ib. 1071). Mr. Bright, however, lays down the rule, from Turner's case, without any doubt or question, and does not refer to the modern cases, in which it was not followed. In a subsequent page, indeed, (231), he cites Sturges v. Champneys and Hanson v. Keating, but without any intimation of their bearing on the proposition in p. 98.

Occasionally Mr. Bright copies Mr. Roper too closely, as at p. 294, vol. 1, where he adopts his author's proposition, that "another bar of the widow's right to her 'paraphernalia occurs when the husband takes upon 'himself to bequeath to his wife her paraphernalia for 'life, and she does not claim them absolutely by her 'elder title as paraphernalia. In this case, it is pre-'sumed that her administrator after her death will not 'be entitled to them; and such seems to have been the 'opinion of the Court in the case of Clarges v. Albe-'marle, (2 Vern. 247)." This proposition is incorrect, and is not warranted by the case in Vernon. If the husband assumes to dispose of his wife's paraphernalia by will, and gives her any benefit by will, she cannot take the benefit, and dispute the disposition of the paraphernalia; but that is a consequence of the general rule as to election, and does not depend on any specialty in the position of a widow, or in the nature of her right to paraphernalia, or on the gift of the paraphernalia being, in the first instance, to herself for life. If, in the case put by Roper, the wife expressly claimed her paraphernalia by her elder title, that would not avail her if she also accepted any benefit under the will; and if, without receiving any benefit under the will, she neglected expressly to assert her elder title to the paraphernalia, that neglect would in no degree prejudice her.

Again, at p. 79, Mr. Bright cites Incledon v. Northcote, (3 Atk. 430), with Walter v. Saunders, (1 Eq. Ab. 58), as an authority for the proposition, that a term vested in trustees for the wife may be assigned, so as to carry the beneficial interest. But in Incledon v. Northcote, the portion was actually raised by means of the term, and so reduced into possession, and the wife afterwards confirmed the transaction by joining in a recovery of the land.

At p. 118 we find an error which must be Mr. Bright's own. After stating the rule of the common law, that the seisin of one tenant in common is the seisin of the other, for the purpose of entitling the husband of the latter to curtesy, he adds, "But now, since the 3 & '4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 12, the possession of one coparcener 'or tenant in common is not that of the other." The enactment in question has nothing to do with curtesy, but refers exclusively to possession for the purposes of the act, namely, for the purpose of determining the commencement of the period of limitation. It refers to the possession spoken of in the other clauses of the act, and is plainly limited in its operation by the scope of the act.

In the chapter on the construction of limitations "to the next of kin," "personal representatives," "executors or administrators," &c. of the husband and wife, we find no reference to the cases of Hoare v. Barnes, (3 Bro. C. C. 316), Maberly v. Strode, (3 Ves. 450), Maugham v. Vincent, (9 Law Journ., Ch., 329), Smith v. Smith, (12 Sim. 317), &c., or to the point involved in them, as to the construction of a limitation to the personal representatives of the wife, as if she had died unmarried.

Mr. Bright cites the recent case of Flask v. Longmate, (8 Beav. 420), as to dower out of a mortgage estate after the equity of redemption has been barred; but passes over Knight v. Frampton, (4 Beav. 10), where A., being seised in fee, in trust for himself and B., in moieties, mortgaged the entirety without B.'s knowledge. B. afterwards paid off the mortgage, and took a conveyance to himself, subject to such equity of redemption as might be subsisting. It was held, that B.'s widow was not dowable out of B.'s moiety. The decision seems to be unsound, but it should not have been passed without notice.

We have not discovered these few errors without search; and, on the whole, we have been impressed with the general accuracy and completeness of Mr. Bright's work, and its utility as a guide to the authorities, though it is to be regretted that so little has been done to elucidate or criticise obscure, conflicting, and erroneous decisions.

We have now before us the concluding part of Mr. Macqueen's work, comprising the law of settlements and of agreements for separation. It fully justifies the favourable opinion which we expressed on the appearance of the first part. Mr. Macqueen goes less into detail, and more into principle, than Mr. Bright; gives to leading cases their due prominence; and, by stating, in language which is often singularly terse, the principle of each case, while he suppresses the particulars, contrives to say much in little compass. A vigilant scrutiny of principle is, in fact, the characteristic of his performance. "Keeping," he says, "within limits of a 'strict adherence to my subject, the relation of husband 'and wife is one peculiarly fertile in legal difficulties, 'and certainly not barren of judicial conflict. Merely to 'collect the cases would have been easy; but I have not 'always thought myself at liberty to give decisions 'without commentary. The remarks of a legal writer

'may be of use in practice. He has his mind full of the 'subject. All the authorities have been reviewed by 'him. He finds a case which, in the language of the 'Courts, 'stands alone.' By a word or two, he may 'prevent it from misleading. He puts readers on their 'inquiry; and, by inducing an exercise of thought, 'fixes legal principle in the reason as well as in the 'memory."

In some supplementary observations on the recent decision of Lord Cottenham, in Whittle v. Henning, (12 Jur. 1079), Mr. Macqueen sanctions a doubt which is occasionally raised in practice, but, we think, without sufficient foundation. He says:—

"The great difficulty is, to determine what shall 'constitute a reduction into possession, so as to bar the 'widow's right. Thus, suppose her entitled to a sum 'of money secured by mortgage, and that the husband 'applies for payment; suppose, also, that the mort-'gagor is obliged to borrow the amount, and that the 'lender stipulates for a continuance of the old debt, and 'for a transfer of the old security; will this transfer 'be a reduction into possession? In other words, is the 'transferee bound to pay to the widow that debt 'which has never been extinguished, but, on the con-'trary, has been kept on foot by his own stipulation? 'According to Purdew v. Jackson, the widow's claim 'seems insuperable. Yet can anything be conceived 'more unjust? The case of Rees v. Keith, before Sir 'L. Shadwell, (11 Sim. 388), does not solve this ques-'tion, because there his Honor assumes that the mort-'gage-debt was paid."

Mr. Bright agrees with Mr. Macqueen, (vol. 1, p. 78). We have always been at a loss to appreciate the difficulty here suggested. The rule in Purdew v. Jackson, &c. is this—that a wife's title by survivorship to her equitable choses en action is barred by nothing short of actual recovery of them in the husband's lifetime. Now, a chose en action, whether legal or equitable, is recovered when the debtor has discharged himself; and, in the case of a mortgage, either directly to A., (which will then, generally, be a security for a legal debt to her), or to a trustee for A., receipt of the money by A. will discharge the debtor, and also the trustee where there is one. But a payment, which would be a re*duction into* possession, if made to A., being single, is equally a reduction into possession when it is made to A.'s husband. But, Mr. Macqueen says, that the debt is kept on foot. This is not so in the case in question, for the chose in action is not a debt owing from the mortgagor to the wife, but money for which the trustee alone is accountable to the wife; that debt or liability is not kept on foot. In the case of a mortgage made to the wife herself, with a covenant for payment, the question would be as to the reduction into possession of a legal chose in action, and would not be governed by the doctrine in Purdew v. Jackson.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

LONDON, APRIL 28, 1849.

It would probably be both an amusing and an instructive inquiry, if one were to examine various subjects of legislation, with a view to ascertain what are the subjects on which legislation can bear with any force, and what are those on which it is wholly or partially powerless; for want of attention to the principle on which legislative power is based has often led, and, in our day, still continually leads, to an enormous waste, not only of legislative labour and acumen—not only to an equal waste of judicial time in the exposition of powerless laws, but to the great waste of public wealth, by reason of the costly endeavours of the executive to do impossible things, and the costly endeavours of the public to escape or baffle the law. We have been led to this subject by the perusal of the extremely amusing debate in the House of Commons of Wednesday last, on the "Bribery at Elections Bill"—a debate in which the unextinguishable vitality of bribery was well described by several of the honourable speakers.

The truth is, legislation is, and probably always will be, nearly, if not wholly, powerless against such sins as bribery. The intention of laws is to protect those who of their own resources would be powerless to prevent or obtain compensation for a wrong. The enforcing of laws depends upon their being supported by the majority of the people, or, in organised communities, by those constituted bodies to whom the constitution has entrusted the exercise of the authority of such majority. Whenever it can be shewn that no particular individual is personally and practically injured, and that the community at large—that body which is termed in an English statesman's phraseology "her Majesty's subjects"—is not injured, or does not feel itself injured at all, or only very indirectly and very remotely, by any particular acts of individuals, however much men may cry out that such acts are bad, legislation will be found powerless to stop the commission of them, for this simple reason, that neither private revenge nor public apprehension is aroused.

In the case of ordinary crime or wrong, there is almost always some individual directly injured; and there is then no difficulty in enforcing laws, except that which results from the force or cunning of the actor in the wrong. If, for instance, I am robbed, or in any minor degree injured, I have a direct interest in enforcing the laws which punish, with an intent to prevent such wrong; and the public at large being indirectly injured in this sense, that every one feels, that, if I am allowed to be injured with impunity, he may be the next person injured, there is nothing to oppose to a strong personal and general interest in enforcing the law, but the power or cunning of the party committing the wrong. But wherever the parties to the act consist not of one positively injuring, and the other positively injured, or wherever the injury is of a kind which does not reflect itself back on the public so as to be felt as an injury to the public at large, then the exercise of legislation becomes useless, because the interest in enforcing any law is languid, and the interest in evading it is, on the contrary, of a most active kind. In such cases as bribery, usury, and the like, there is no individual personally injured, or, at least, thinking himself injured: on the contrary, the parties to the act are both willing; while the public, though calling the thing criminal or improper, is injured, if at all, in a manner so indirect and remote, as really to care but very little about the matter. Hence it is, that all legislation against usury proved abortive, and that all legislation against bribery has hitherto proved abortive. If a borrower, at high interest, disliked borrowing even at high interest, or if a briber at an election disliked receiving the bribe, as much as a man dislikes being robbed or beaten, there would be no difficulty in enforcing laws against usury and bribery, or rather such laws would become quite unnecessary. So, if the act of lending me money at a high interest, or giving me a bribe did, in fact, affect the public with a sensible apprehension of an actual mischief, again there would be no difficulty in enforcing the law.

But such is not the state of things in reference to usury and bribery. In the one case, the borrower is as anxious to borrow, notwithstanding the high interest, as the lender to lend at high interest; in the other, the bribee is quite as willing to be bribed, as the candidate, by himself or by his agents, is to bribe*. The public, in either case, has a vague notion that it is injured, though how it scarcely knows, and, therefore, does not much care. Hence, while the parties to the offence, instead of being composed of an actor and a patient, (the latter being anxious to revenge or obtain compensation for his wrong), are composed of a donor and donee, (the one being as glad to receive as the other to give—both, therefore, combining with their utmost cunning to avoid any regulations that may be made to prevent the transaction), is it wonderful—is it not, on the contrary, inevitable—that, under such circumstances, [illegible] transactions? The truth seems to be this—that the Legislature may usefully legislate to prevent acts which work a positive wrong to an individual, stirring up his personal desire of redress, or acts which visibly and positively affect the well-being of society; but it cannot, by any laws, prevent acts depending on a compact between individuals, mutually convenient to the contracting parties, where the mischief resulting from such transactions to the public—if, indeed, there be any mischief—is but remote and indirect.

It is now well understood, that the only effect of the usury laws was to raise the interest of money; the lender having to insure himself not only against the risk arising from the defect in the security itself, but against the risk of the borrower relying upon the law to set aside the whole transaction. So we apprehend the fact to be, and we have no doubt it will, before long, be admitted, that the only effect of the laws against bribery is to raise the price of votes; the voter having, as it were, to insure himself against penalties, as well as to obtain the natural market price of his vote. We are of course assuming that there is such a thing as a venal constituent body, an assumption which is abundantly warranted by the fact of there being so much bribery, in spite of the legislation, as to keep the Legislature, session after session, on the qui vive to prevent it. Now, this being so, there are two modes—and, as we apprehend, two modes only—of dealing with the mischief. The one is to eliminate from every constituency, if it be possible, the venal portion; and, if that be not possible—and it would seem that it is not—then to let it altogether alone, so that the price of votes might acquire no factitious value from the danger accompanying bribery: the evil to the state would then be much less than it is now, by the artificial value which is conferred on votes by legislation impotent for any other purpose.

* This is well shewn by the prevalence of the subterfuges so amusingly detailed by Sir Robert Peel in the debate referred to.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW OF MARRIAGE.

A question of considerable importance is raised by a bill now before Parliament "to amend and alter the Act of the fifth and sixth Years of King William the Fourth, so far as relates to Marriages within certain of the prohibited Degrees of Affinity," introduced in consequence of the decision in Reg. v. Chadwick, (12 Jur. 174; 17 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 81), where it was held, that marriages between a widower and the sister of his deceased wife were, since the passing of the above statute, absolutely void. By the 1st section it is provided, "that so much of the said recited act as renders any marriage between a man and the sister of his deceased wife, or between a man and the daughter of the brother or sister of his deceased wife, null and void," shall be repealed; and the 2nd section provides, that such marriages, unless in excepted cases, shall not be voidable. Now, as these marriages are forbidden by the old canon law and by the canons of the Church of England, 1603, it is asked, would these marriages, after the passing of this bill, be allowable in the Church of England? The present bill removes all statutory prohibitions, and provides that the marriages, if contracted, shall be neither voidable nor void; but it does not remove the canonical prohibitions and impediments; and, indeed, scarcely could do so, without assuming the power of a national synod, or of a general council of the Church. The old canon law holds these marriages to be generally unlawful; and those canons, except where contrarient to the common or statute law, or prerogative royal, are in force in this country. (Addison v. Bp. of Chester, Str. 1056). The 99th canon of the Church of England pronounces these marriages to be unlawful and incestuous; and these canons are undoubtedly binding on the clergy. (12 Co. 73; 2 Com. Dig. 484). The canonical impediments would, therefore, still remain in operation; and the Church of England would occupy pretty nearly the same position in relation to these marriages as she did before the reign of Henry VIII, and as the Roman Catholic Church in England and Ireland does at this day. Her canons, proprio vigore, would bind all her members; of course, they could not exercise any coercive power over those who were not in her communion. The practice of the Roman Catholic Church in this matter is thus stated by a high dignitary of that Church, (vide First Report of Commissioners, p. 104):—"Such a marriage, of course, is considered unlawful; and a marriage contracted by the parties within these degrees would be null. Supposing that two persons wished to contract such a marriage—that a person, for instance, wished to marry his sister-in-law, no priest could marry him unless he first obtained a dispensation. A dispensation would not be granted upon general grounds, but only upon a particular consideration of the case. If the marriage had been already contracted, it would also be considered null, and a dispensation would also be necessary.—When you say 'unlawful,' you mean unlawful by the law of the Church? Yes.—And when you think proper to dispense with such unlawfulness, you think proper to dispense with a regulation of the Church, and not with a prohibition of Scripture? Certainly.—Then the Commissioners are to understand, that, in your Church, the general prohibition of these marriages is a matter of discipline, and permission to contract such marriages is granted or not, according to what you may think most advantageous and proper? Certainly." By the stat. 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, the power of granting dispensations in any case, not contrary to the holy Scriptures and the law of God, where the Pope used formerly to grant them, is given to the Archbishop of Canterbury; which, as Blackstone remarks, is the foundation of his granting special licenses to marry at any place or time, to hold two livings, and the like; and on this also is founded the right he exercises of conferring degrees, in prejudice of the two universities. (1 Black. Com. 381). If, therefore, these marriages are by the Church of England held to be prohibited by the authority of the holy Scriptures, and not by ecclesiastical legislation, they will, after the passing of the bill, to all intents and purposes, be as absolutely prohibited to the members of the Church of England as they are by the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54; but if the prohibition should be held to be matter of ecclesiastical discipline merely, and not a perpetual and unchangeable injunction of the divine law, binding equally on Jews and Christians, the power of dispensation would pass to the Archbishop of Canterbury. This question would probably render it necessary that the point should be submitted to the determination of Convocation; for, from the evidence taken before the Commissioners, it appears that a wide difference of opinion prevails upon it among the bishops and clergy of the Church of England and Ireland. By the old canon law these marriages were treated as a matter of ecclesiastical discipline; and everything would depend upon whether the 99th canon of the Church of England was held to be declaratory of the old canon law, or an express and unequivocal declaration, that marriage between a widower and the sister of his deceased wife was prohibited in Leviticus; and then, whether that prohibition (assuming it to exist) was intended to be, like the moral law, of perpetual and general application, or merely derived its binding force over Christians from the canonical authority of the Church.

This much appears certain, that the present bill would not have the effect of altering the canons of the Church of England, which forbid these marriages, and in the Church of England they would still be prohibited absolutely, unless, indeed, it should be held, that the case was within 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, which transfers the dispensing power of the Pope, in matters of ecclesiastical discipline, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The bill provides, that all marriages heretofore contracted within the degrees above mentioned, shall be valid to all intents and purposes: and, after the passing of the act, all Protestant Dissenters, who hold that such marriages are not prohibited by Scripture; Catholics, who shall have obtained an ecclesiastical dispensation; and Jews, who, according to the evidence of the Chief Rabbi, (vide Rep. of Com. 152), not only hold that such marriages are not prohibited, but are distinctly understood to be permitted by the Levitical code, will be able to contract such marriages.

The Commissioners, in the Report to her Majesty, on which the present bill is founded, state their opinion strongly, that the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, has failed in its object, and urge very strong moral reasons against the policy of the prohibition. And they add, "The doubts which exist as to the validity of these marriages, when celebrated abroad, under a variety of circumstances, add another evil consequence to those which we have enumerated*." In nearly all the continental states of Europe, Protestant as well as Roman Catholic, these marriages are, by dispensation or otherwise, permitted; and they are lawful and valid in the United States of America; (vide Story's Conflict of Laws, c. v, s. 115): and it seems obviously to be desirable to remove the statutory prohibitions which are found to create such confusion and evil, and to leave each case, as a matter of ecclesiastical discipline, to each church and religious community, to be dealt with according to their interpretation of the Scriptures, or the canons of the Christian Church.

* The Commissioners were—The Lord Bishop of Lichfield, Right Hon. J. S. Wortley, M.P., Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, D.C.L., Right Hon. A. Blake, Sir Edward Vaughan Williams, A. Rutherford, Esq., M.P., Lord Advocate for Scotland.

LONDON, MAY 5, 1849.

Among the numerous questions which have been raised on Lord Tenterden's Prescription Acts, none has caused a greater diversity of opinion than the construction of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, for "shortening the time required in claims of modus decimandi, or exemption from or discharge of tithes." It has been contended, that this statute has had the effect of making the mere non-payment of tithes by a layman, for the period mentioned in the act, a valid ground for exemption, although, at the time of the passing of the statute, such mere non-payment, however far it might have been carried back, did not of itself afford an answer to a tithe claim. On the other hand, it has been insisted, that the only effect of the statute has been to shorten the period of time required for proof of such a modus or exemption as was recognised by the law at the time of the enactment, and not to introduce a new title or ground of exemption.

The principal case on this subject is Salkeld v. Johnson, which, having been before Sir James Wigram, (1 Hare, 196), the Court of Common Pleas, (2 C. B. 749), and the Court of Exchequer, (18 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 89), has now, we understand, been referred to the Court of Queen's Bench by the Lord Chancellor, in whom the ultimate decision of the question is vested. In this case the plaintiff claims tithes, as vicar, from the defendants, as occupiers of land; and the answer thereto is, that the defendants have enjoyed such lands without payment of tithes, or money or other matter in lieu thereof, for the period limited in the statute.

Sir James Wigram, in a luminous judgment, decided for the plaintiff. The defendants appealed to the Lord Chancellor, who ordered a case to be stated for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas. Tindal, C. J., and Cresswell, J., certified in favour of the plaintiff; Coltman and Erle, JJ., in favour of the defendants. A case was then stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and their judgment was delivered by Pollock, C. B., for the defendants.

It should also be stated that the same point was before the Court of Queen's Bench in 1843, (Fellowes v. Clay, 4 Q. B. Rep. 313), when Lord Denman, C. J., and Williams, J., were in favour of the exemption by mere non-payment; but Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., were of a different opinion.

While judicial views are thus conflicting and uncertain on this subject, we shall content ourselves with laying before our readers the state of the law relating to exemption from the payment of tithes at the time of the passing of the statute, the provisions of the statute itself which bear upon the point, and a brief summary of the arguments advanced on either side.

The statute applies to a modus, a composition real, and an exemption from and discharge of tithes. At the time of its passing, a modus could be established by proof of its constant and unvarying payment from the time of legal memory; a composition real by proof of its existence by deed before 13 Eliz.; but an entire exemption from the payment of tithe by laymen could not be established by the simple proof of the non-payment of tithes for any period, as proof must also have been given of the legal origin thereof—that is, that the lands had belonged to one of the greater religious houses dissolved by Henry VIII, and had been holden by such house from time immemorial, discharged from payment of tithes. Mere non-payment was no ground of exemption for the laity, "modus de non decimando in laicis non valet;" and, therefore, their defence to a suit for tithes consisted of two parts—first, title; secondly, time; and the course in practice was, first, to prove that the lands were abbey lands at the period of the dissolution of monasteries; and, secondly, that from time immemorial they had been exempt from tithe. This latter branch of the case was proved primâ facie by evidence of modern user or enjoyment of the lands without payment of tithe; but the presumption arising therefrom, or from proof extending back for centuries, might be rebutted by production of a terrier, survey, valuation, or other document of more ancient date, shewing that tithe had once been paid for such lands. Such was the state of the law when 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100, was passed.

The title we have already given, and the following, are, in substance, the important parts which bear upon the question:—

The 1st section recites, that "the expense and inconvenience of suits instituted for the recovery of tithes may and ought to be prevented, by shortening the time required for the valid establishment of claims of a modus decimandi, or exemption from or discharge of tithes;" and enacts, that "all prescriptions and claims of or for any modus decimandi, or of or to any exemption from or discharge of tithes, by composition real or otherwise," shall, where tithes are demanded by the Crown, by any lay person, or a corporation aggregate, "be sustained, and be deemed good and valid in law, upon evidence shewing, in cases of claim of a modus decimandi, the payment or render of such modus; and in cases of claim to exemption or discharge, shewing the enjoyment of the land without payment or render of tithes, money or other matter in lieu thereof, for the full period of thirty years next before the time of such demand, unless, in the case of claim of a modus decimandi, the actual payment or render of tithes in kind, or of money or other thing differing in amount, quality, or quantity from the modus claimed, or, in case of claim to exemption or discharge, the render or payment of tithes, or of money or other matter in lieu thereof, shall be shewn to have taken place at some time prior to such thirty years, or it shall be proved that such payment or render of modus was made, or enjoyment had, by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing; and if such proof in support of the claim shall be extended to the full period of sixty years next before the time of such demand, in such cases the claim shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it shall be proved that such payment or render of modus was made, or enjoyment had, by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing." And where the render of tithes in kind shall be demanded by any archbishop, vicar, &c., then such prescription and claim shall be valid and indefeasible, upon evidence shewing such payment, render, or enjoyment before mentioned, during two incumbencies, (amounting to sixty years), and three years of a third incumbency.

Sect. 2 enacts, "that every composition for tithes which hath been made or confirmed by the decree of any court of equity in England, in a suit to which the ordinary, patron, and incumbent were parties, and which hath not since been set aside, abandoned, or departed from, shall be and the same is hereby confirmed and made valid in law; and that no modus, exemption, or discharge shall be deemed to be within the provisions of this act, unless such modus, exemption, or discharge shall be proved to have existed and been acted upon at the time of, or within one year next before, the passing of this act."

Sect. 7 enacts, "that, in all actions and suits to be commenced after this act shall take effect, it shall be sufficient to allege, that the modus, or exemption or discharge, claimed was actually exercised and enjoyed for such of the periods mentioned in this act as may be applicable to the case; and if the other party shall intend to rely on any proviso, exception, incapacity, disability, contract, agreement, deed, or writing herein mentioned, or any other matter of fact or of law not inconsistent with the simple fact of the exercise and enjoyment of the matter claimed, the same shall be specially alleged and set forth in answer to the allegation of the party claiming, and shall not be received in evidence on any general traverse or denial of the matter claimed."

In a future article we propose to consider the grounds on which our Courts have arrived at such different and opposing conclusions as to the operation of this statute.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The same certainty is required in the return as before the statute of Anne. (Rex v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 152, per Mansfield, C. J.) The rule is, not to presume everything against the return; there should be no presumption either one way or the other. (Rex v. Lyme Regis, E., 19 Geo. 3, Selw. N. P. 1092). The return, need not be under the seal of the corporation, nor is it requisite that it should be signed by the mayor. The return being matter of record, as such, is not required, when made by a corporation, to be under hand or seal; and, if false, an action will lie against the body politic or the person who procures the false return, as in other cases. (Rex v. The Mayor of Exeter, Ld. Raym. 223; see also Rex v. Chalice, 2 Ld. Raym. 848; S. P., Com. Dig. "Mandamus," (D.) 2). If an action be brought for a false return, it will be sufficient evidence against the party that the mandamus was delivered to him, and has such a return, unless he can shew the contrary. (Bull. N. P., "Mandamus," 200).

The return, when complete, must be filed. Either party may move to file it on a motion paper signed by counsel. This is done by indorsing a motion paper and handing it to counsel, indorsed "to move to file the writ and return," which, when signed, must be taken to your clerk in court in the Crown-office. It is not sufficient for the party or parties to whom the writ is directed merely to leave the writ and return with a clerk in court, as he is not bound to file it without such motion paper; and, unless it is on the proper file within six days next after service of the side-bar rule, the prosecutor may, if he is adverse, upon an affidavit of the service of the side-bar rule, and that the writ and return are not on the proper file, move for a rule to shew cause why a writ of attachment should not issue against the party or parties for not returning the writ of mandamus; or, upon an affidavit of the service of the writ of mandamus without a side-bar rule, the Court will grant a rule to shew cause why an attachment should not issue; and, if such application be made, the Court will not discharge the rule but upon payment of costs. (Gude's Crown-office Prac. 185). When once filed it stands, and no objection can be taken that it was not filed in time, there being no instance of a return being quashed because filed too late. (Reg. v. Kendall, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 374). The Court will not stay the filing of the return upon a suggestion that the return was made against the votes of the majority, who would have obeyed the writ; for, if the mayor make a return contrary to the votes of the majority, it is at his peril, and he may be punished for it. (Rex v. Abingdon, Salk. 431).

Where an information is the proper remedy for disobedience to a mandamus, the return must be filed and allowed before the information can be moved for. (Bull. N. P. 203).

If any clerical mistake be discovered in the return, the party should apply forthwith to have it amended, (Rex v. The Mayor of Newbury, 1 Adol. & Ell. 759), which the Court or a judge will order: this has been done even after the return is filed and called on for argument. (Rex v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 130; Reg. v. The Directors of St. Pancras, MS., 1843). And if a return made to a mandamus be insufficient to raise the question intended to be agitated, the Court will, at the instance of the party interested, grant leave to amend in the manner required. (Rex v. Marriott, 1 D. & R. 166). All the statutes of jeofails are extended to writs of mandamus, and the proceedings thereupon. (9 Ann. c. 20, s. 7; 4 Ann. c. 16; 32 Hen. 8, c. 30; 18 Eliz. c. 14; 37 Eliz. c. 5; 21 Jac. 1, c. 13; 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 28). Variances between proof and recital, or setting out matters upon the record, may be amended on the trial, by virtue of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 43, s. 23.

Formerly, if the return to a mandamus was insufficient or defective in any of the preceding requisites, either in form or substance, or manifestly frivolous and contemptuous, the Court would order the return to be quashed, and a peremptory mandamus to issue forthwith. (Rex v. Payn, 6 Adol. & Ell. 392, 403; Reg. v. St. Saviour's, Southwark, 7 Adol. & Ell. 925, 936 et seq.) It was discretionary in the Court, however, either to determine the validity of the return upon motion, or to order the case to be set down in the Crown paper for argument upon a concilium, (Rex v. St. Katharine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Adol. 360; 1 Nev. & M. 121; Reg. v. The North Midland Railway Company, 11 Adol. & Ell. 955, n.; S. C., 3 P. & D. 622); which latter course the parties were usually left to, unless the return was manifestly frivolous and contemptuous. (Reg. v. St. Saviour's, Southwark, 7 Adol. & Ell. 925, 936 et seq.; Reg. v. Kendall, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 374). If a return consist of several independent matters not inconsistent with each other, part of which are good in law, and part bad, the Court will not quash the whole return, but such part only as they deem bad. (Rex v. Cambridge, 2 T. R. 456; Rex v. York, 5 T. R. 66).

Where a mandamus had issued, directing the trustees of a turnpike-road to hold an inquisition, and ascertain the damage occasioned to a landowner by a new road cut through his land, the jury summoned for that purpose, after having been locked up for a whole night, and not being likely to agree, on the following day were discharged, without the consent of the party. The Court refused to quash a return stating these facts, without further discussion. (Rex v. The Harbour-roads Trustees, 4 Jur. 50).

It being discretionary with the Court whether they entertained the validity of the return summarily upon motion, which was seldom done unless clearly bad, or was so evasive and frivolous as to amount to a contempt, (Reg. v. The North Midland Railway Company, 11 Adol. & Ell. 955, n.), the parties were left to argue the matter upon a concilium, in the usual way.

The judgment, however, in these cases, being final, for no writ of error could be brought upon it, (Rex v. The Lord of the Manor of Oundle, 1 Adol. & Ell. 283), it was deemed advisable to make an alteration in the practice to remedy this defect. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 1, enacts, "that in all cases in which the person prosecuting any such writ heretofore issued, or hereafter to be issued, shall wish or intend to object to the validity of any return already made or hereafter to be made to the same, he shall do so by way of demurrer to the same, in such and the like manner as is now practised and used in the Court of Queen's Bench and the Courts of the counties palatine respectively in personal actions; and thereupon the said writ and return, and the said demurrer, shall be entered upon record in the said courts respectively, and such and the like further proceedings shall be thereupon had and taken as upon a demurrer to pleadings in personal actions in the said courts respectively; and the said courts respectively shall thereupon adjudge, either that the return is valid in law, or that it is not valid in law, or that the writ of mandamus is not valid in law; and if they adjudge that the said writ is valid in law, but that the return thereto is not valid in law, then and in every such case they shall also, by their said judgment, award that a peremptory mandamus shall issue in that behalf; and thereupon such peremptory writ of mandamus may be sued out and issued accordingly, at any time after four days from the signing of the said judgment; and it shall be lawful for the said courts respectively, and they are hereby required, in and by their said judgment, to award costs to be paid to the party in whose favour they shall decide, by the other party or parties."

If, therefore, a party wishes to object to the validity of a return to the mandamus, his proper course will be to demur, which, it is conceived, must be according to the form and rules adopted in personal actions with reference to pleading. The form of demurrer would be as follows:—

"In the Queen's Bench.

The —— day of ——, A. D. 1849.

Reg., on the prosecution of A. B.,

v.

The Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of C.

"The said A.B., in the said writ and return named, by E. T., his attorney, says, that the said return is not sufficient in law. [If the causes of demurrer be special, they should be specifically pointed out thus:—] And he states and shews to the Court here the following causes of demurrer to the said return; that is to say, for that [here set them out]: and also, for that the said return is in other respects uncertain, informal, and insufficient," &c.

This demurrer must be signed by counsel; and, according to the Rule of H. T., 4 Will. 4, r. 2, some matter of law intended to be argued must be stated in the margin. Two copies should be then made on plain paper, one of which must be filed at the Crown-office, and the other delivered to the opposite attorney.

No rule for joinder in demurrer is necessary. (H. T., 4 Will. 4, r. 3). A demand may be made on the back of the demurrer, or separately. If the opposite party does not, within four days after such demand, deliver the same, or obtain further time, the party making the demand may sign judgment. The joinder may be in the following form:—

"In the Queen's Bench.

The —— day of ——, A. D. 1847.

The Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of C.

ats.

Reg., on the prosecution of A. B.

"The said Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of C., by E. T., their attorney, say that the said return is sufficient in law."

By rule H. T., 4 Will. 4, no signature of counsel is requisite. Two copies should be made, one of which should be filed, and the other delivered to the opposite party, in the same way as the demurrer. So soon as the defendant has joined in demurrer, the proper course is to obtain a rule for a concilium, which is done on the production of counsel's signature to a motion paper at the Crown-office. This rule will specify the day on which the case will be put in the Crown paper for argument. This rule must be served on the opposite party six days at least before such day, if within forty miles of London, and eight days if exceeding that distance.

Paper books must then be prepared, containing an entry of all the proceedings, with the points intended for argument. These books must be delivered to the judges at Chambers two days before the day on which the case will be placed in the paper for argument, according to Rule 23. On the case coming on to be heard at the usual time appointed, the counsel for the party impugning the return is first heard; (Rex v. The Church Trustees of St. Pancras, 3 Adol. & Ell. 535; S. C., 6 Adol. & Ell. 314); then the counsel for the defendants; then the counsel for the prosecutor replies. One counsel only is in general allowed to argue. No objections can be taken by the prosecutor's counsel, except such as appear upon the face of the return. (Reg. v. The Select Vestry of St. Margaret's, Leicester, 10 Adol. & Ell. 732, n.) The defendant's counsel, however, is at liberty to object to the writ in matters of substance appearing on the face of it. If, therefore, a writ be improperly directed, for instance, to the steward of a manor alone, where the lord ought to be joined, this has been held to be a defect in substance. (Reg. v. Powell, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 352).

If, on argument, the writ is holden to be bad, the Court give judgment that it be quashed, and that the defendants do recover their costs. If, however, the writ is held to be good, but the return bad, they award judgment for the prosecutor, with costs, and that a peremptory mandamus do issue. (Rex v. Kendall, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 366; see also 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 1).

Report of a Committee of the Society for Promoting the Amendment of the Law, on the Law Reporting System.

The Delay in the Offices of the Masters in Chancery, and the Remedy. By C. P. COOPER, Esq., Q. C.
[London: Stevens & Norton, 1849.]

Statistics are, in general, exceeding nauseous intellectual food: they furnish, however, in a great variety of instances, the most conclusive arguments that can be found in support of or against given systems. The statistics of the Report above referred to are not an exception to either of the above propositions: they are much more tiresome, but, at the same time, much more conclusive, than any arguments that could be brought to bear, unsupported by statistical statements, on the present state of law reporting. It appears that there are more than forty Barristers constantly employed in the preparation of the regular reports, and at least as many more employed in the different legal periodicals. It appears that the reports of the decided cases in any year for one term, in any of the superior courts, at the present day, exceed in bulk those of all the tribunals in the country, for the whole year, seventy years ago. It appears that the annual cost of a set of the regular reports for each year now, is about 30*l.*; and it is computed that the average circulation is about 750 copies of each set; so that the money annually laid out by the Profession is 22,500*l.*

The Report, having made these and other statistics, proceeds thus:—

"The high price of law books has for years been 'a common subject of complaint; and when it is 'considered what a small proportion of this price 'goes into the pocket of the author or compiler, it is 'remarkable that the Profession, who are at once the 'producers and consumers, should have never yet at-'tempted a remedy.

"The commission allowances, &c., to the trade on the 'sale of books, generally amount to between 30 and 40 'per cent., and sometimes even more, on the cost of a 'book. Thus, on a book of Law Reports, on which the 'smallest allowance is made, if the money is to be ac-'counted for to the author, first of all 20 per cent. on '2*l.*, its nominal price, is allowed to the retail bookseller; 5 per cent. more, and one copy in twenty-five, in 'all 9 per cent., or 3*s.* 8*d.*, to the wholesale bookseller; 'and 7½ per cent., at least, or 3*s.*, by way of commission, 'to printing and advertisement expenses and the pub-'lisher; only 1*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* being left for the remuneration 'of the author. Hence it obviously requires a sale 'of 400 copies of such a work to save the proprietor of 'the copyright from positive loss; and the publishers, 'relying on this, generally succeed in getting the copy-'rights of the Reports into their own hands.

"If, in any case, a society for the purpose of publish-'ing books were practicable, it would seem most pecu-'liarly so among the Legal Profession.

"The 'Law List' of the present year contains the 'names of about 14,000 practising barristers, attornies, 'and solicitors; and this list would be vastly increased 'by an addition of the local and colonial judges, magis-'trates, and law officers, and the crowd of students, 'articled clerks, &c., preparing themselves for the Pro-'fession.

"To the majority of this numerous class the serious 'expense of the Law Reports in their present shape is 'the principal objection which prevents their being 'used.

"Now, if, instead of the limited average circulation 'on which the above calculations are formed, the Re-'ports were generally circulated amongst the Profes-'sion, the majority of them—say, for the sake of round 'numbers, 10,000—annually contributing to a fund for 'the purpose, a sum less than it may be assumed they 'have at present annually to lay out, it is pretty clear 'that, instead of 30*l.*, the small annual sum of three 'pounds would be amply sufficient to secure to each of 'the contributors a supply of all the Reports, even in 'their present form: a fact which may be easily ren- 'dered intelligible.

"The printing and binding of 1000 copies of an or- 'dinary octavo volume of Law Reports, of even 800 'pages, costs about 330*l.*, and every additional 1000 'copies about 160*l.*; and thus 10,000 copies of such a 'work can be produced for about 1770*l.*: and if the 'expenses of ten series of Reports, at this rate, be added 'to the sum already estimated as the amount of the re- 'porters' present remuneration, it will be found that the 'whole expense of a set of Reports for each court, as 'voluminous as they are at present, would leave a large 'surplus from the amount of the small annual contri- 'bution suggested."

The object of the Report seems, principally, to shew, that, if the Profession would take upon itself to be its own bookseller, it might have its Reports at the rate of about 3*l.* per head per annum, instead of 30*l.* We doubt not that this may be so; but the same result, or nearly the same result, would be produced if 10,000 members of the Profession purchased Reports without any association. The profit then made by the publisher would be so large, that competition would bring down the price of Reports to the due proportion between expenditure and profit. The difficulty lies in this—that 10,000 of the Profession will not buy Reports; neither would 10,000 subscribe 3*l.* a year each to be provided with all the Reports. We confess we have no great faith in the success of applying the club system to the publication of Reports by the Profession. The experiment is, however, easily tried. Let any one or more members of the Profession procure 10,000 subscribers to any set of Reports, and then inquire of the existing publisher of those Reports for what he will supply 10,000 copies, guaranteeing to him the sale of such number. It would soon be seen at what price, so guaranteed, a publisher could supply Reports, and whether the Profession would gain or lose by becoming its own publisher, or continuing to buy books from a publisher in the ordinary way.

Mr. C. Purton Cooper's pamphlet, "On the Delay in the Offices of the Masters in Chancery," is published at an opportune moment, and the suggestions contained in the latter part of it come, in many points, singularly in aid of some of the views put forth in the leading article of THE JURIST of the 14th ultimo. Mr. Purton Cooper thinks it necessary, in his Preface, to argue, for the satisfaction of the Profession, that increase of simplicity and dispatch in Chancery proceedings will, by causing a greater flow of business into Chancery, compensate for the diminution of emolument in each case. We believe him to be right in his conclusion; though whether he is so or not is not very material, because, if it be the fact that Chancery proceedings can be simplified, and if the public become once convinced that it is for their benefit that they should be so, not all the opposition of all the branches of the Profession can prevent the simplification being carried into effect. We add, as we have said on more than one occasion in the pages of this journal, that we are convinced no opposition, founded on merely mercenary motives, will ever be made to beneficial reforms in the law from the most influential, if not the most numerous, portion of each branch of the Profession.

The gist of Mr. Cooper's suggestions, with regard to the Masters' offices, is to substitute responsibility in the Masters to the public, for their present responsibility to the Court only; to invest them with certain powers, under regulations, for compelling parties to proceed; and to assimilate, as much as possible, the course of proceeding in the Masters' office to that of the Court, getting rid of that most mischievous feature, the separate warrants. The following extract will shew the author's notions as to bringing business to a hearing before the Master:—

"So soon as the decrees and orders in causes and 'matters directing references shall have been passed and 'entered, such causes and matters shall be forthwith 'set down for hearing before the Master in a book 'similar to that in which causes and matters are set 'down for hearing before the Court.

"If the party having the prosecution of the decree 'or order neglects so to set down the same for twenty- 'four hours after the decree or order shall have been 'passed and entered, the same may be set down by any 'other party interested.

"Fee to be allowed for such setting down.

"In case the Master shall find that the parties have 'neglected to set down a decree or order for hearing 'before him, he shall direct one of the solicitors to the 'offices of the Masters hereinafter mentioned to set 'down such decree or order, and to give notice of such 'setting down to the solicitors of the parties, or to the 'parties themselves, if they have no solicitors.

"The Master shall be at liberty to select the causes 'and matters belonging to a particular class, and to 'direct the same to be brought to a hearing before him 'on such days as to him shall seem convenient, due 'notice of such selection, &c. being given.

"Subject to the last regulation, and to the two next 'ensuing regulations, all causes and matters shall be 'brought to a hearing before the Master in the order 'in which the same shall have been set down for hear- 'ing in the book hereinbefore mentioned.

"On one day in every week, during the sittings of 'the Court or of the Master, there shall be a paper of 'consent and short causes and matters, analogous to the 'consent and short cause papers of the Master of the 'Rolls and Vice-Chancellors.

"Short causes and matters shall be certified as such 'by one of the solicitors concerned; or, in default of 'a solicitor to any party, by one of the solicitors to the 'offices of the Masters hereinafter mentioned.

"On one day in every week, during the sittings of 'the Court or of the Master, there shall be a paper of 'causes and matters, in which, either from the same 'not having been yet brought to a hearing before the 'Master, or for any other reason, the mode of proceed- 'ing is doubtful, and it is requisite to have the direction 'of the Master thereupon.

"Such paper shall be entitled 'Causes and Matters 'in which the Direction of the Master as to the Mode 'of proceeding is desired.'

"In all cases of causes and matters in which the 'Master shall give direction as to the mode of pro- 'ceeding, he shall fix the time at or before which the 'same shall be again brought to a hearing before him.

"In all cases of causes and matters in which refer- 'ences are pending before the Master that may not be 'specifically described in any of these regulations, the 'Master, when such causes and matters come before 'him for hearing, shall in like manner fix the time for 'the same being again brought to a hearing before him.

"There must be regulations to insure this being done 'by the solicitors to the offices of the Masters herein- 'after mentioned, if not done by the solicitors to the 'parties, or by the parties themselves, they having no 'solicitor; the design being, that there shall be no 'cause or matter in which a reference is pending, and 'which has been once before the Master, as to which 'there shall not be a time fixed within which the same 'must be again brought before the Master for his di- 'rection or decision.

Digitized by Google

"Applications for leave to amend bills, for time to 'answer, and to enlarge publication, and references as 'to impertinence and as to insufficiency, shall be heard 'on particular days to be fixed by the Master, unless 'the same be of a pressing nature.

"Causes and matters of a pressing nature, or in re-'spect of which the report or certificate of the Master 'must be obtained prior to the particular days fixed by 'the Master for hearing causes and matters of the class 'to which they belong, shall be placed in a short line 'at the head of the Master's paper of the day, the leave 'of the Master (to be signified in such way as he may 'direct) being previously had.

"The Master shall cause a paper of the causes and 'matters, coming on before him for hearing each day, 'to be affixed in some convenient place at or before 'five o'clock in the evening of the preceding day.

"Such paper shall specify in which of such causes 'and matters counsel will attend.

"The causes and matters shall be called on for hear-'ing in the order in which they stand in such paper.

"The Master shall be enjoined and required not to 'postpone the hearing of any cause or matter by reason 'of the absence of counsel, solicitor, or party, unless the 'parties engaged in the succeeding causes and matters 'are ready, and such causes and matters will occupy 'the remainder of the Master's day."

Mr. Cooper also proposes to refer, in the first instance, all questions of title to a conveyancer, to be a salaried officer of the court; and all questions of account to an accountant, to be also a salaried officer of the court; and to have an appeal from these officers to the Master. We think the suggestion of having such officers attached to the court a good one; but we cannot see why there should be a separate hearing before them, and an appeal to the Master. They should be simply the Master's advisers, and the Master should make and be responsible for the decision. Surely, three appeals—from the Master to the Court; from the Court to the Lord Chancellor; and from the Chancellor to the House of Lords—are enough for any mortal litigant.

Mr. Cooper's suggestions, as to general simplification of proceedings out of the Masters' offices, have reference to the total abolition of bills and answers in all cases of mere construction of written instruments, and in all administration business. On this he says—

"The three main subjects of Chancery suits and 'proceedings are:—I. The Construction of Wills, Mar-'riage Settlements, and other written Instruments. 'II. The Appointment of Guardians, and the Allow-'ance of Maintenance to Infants. III. The Adminis-'tration of the Estates of Testators and Intestates.

"Regulations, somewhat of the nature of those en-'suing, would, as the writer apprehends, much diminish 'expense and delay.

"I. The Construction of Wills, Marriage Settle-'ments, and other written Instruments.

"1. In all cases in which the only question is the 'construction of a written instrument, any party inte-'rested shall be at liberty to serve a statement of his 'claim thereunder upon all other parties having, or 'supposing to have, an interest; and the Court shall 'have power, upon the appearance of all parties, or 'upon due proof of service of such statement of claim 'upon them, to make a declaration of the rights of all 'parties under such instrument.

"2. Such declaration may extend to cases of that 'kind, which are embraced by the Scotch declaratory 'action.

"A large proportion of short causes involve the con-'struction of some written instrument merely. No 'fact is in dispute. The meaning of a few lines—of a 'few words—is the only embarrassment. Nothing more 'is wanted by the parties for their guidance—to enable 'them to alien, encumber, settle, devise—than a declar-'ation of the Court. What is there, apart from old 'prejudice, which we are fast getting rid of, to prevent 'this from being obtained, without the cumbrous and 'expensive machinery of bill and answer?

"II. The Appointment of Guardians, and the Al-'lowance of Maintenance to Infants.

"1. Any one, upon an affidavit stating the requisite 'facts, shall be at liberty to apply to the Master to 'appoint guardians to infants, and to make an allow-'ance for their maintenance.

"2. In cases in which there is no dissatisfaction 'with the decision of the Master, his certificate, stating 'the names of the guardians and the amount allowed 'for maintenance, sufficient.

"The petition for a reference is a useless expense, 'and the petition for the confirmation of the Master's 'report, where there is no dissatisfaction, is equally a 'useless expense.

"3. In cases where the parties are dissatisfied with 'the decision of the Master, he shall make his report 'of the proceedings before him in the usual way, to 'give opportunity of an appeal to the Court.

"In cases belonging to this class, the Master shall 'be at liberty to dispense with strictly legal evidence 'of facts, respecting which there is no dispute, when 'such strictly legal evidence cannot be obtained with-'out delay or expense.

"The writer has known proceedings, in cases of this 'kind, suspended for twelve months, the Master re-'quiring the best evidence of the identity and ages of 'the infants, which could only be procured from the 'East Indies. The Court cannot be too difficult as to 'the evidence received where a fund is to be distri-'buted. But, in questions of guardian and mainte-'nance, may it not, without incurring an imputation 'of rashness, be thought—no one suggesting any doubt—'that evidence of a degree less high may safely be 'admitted, when none better can be had without addi-'tional delay or expense?

"III. The Administration of the Estates of Testators 'and Intestates.

"1. Creditors, legatees, annuitants, widows, and next 'of kin, shall be at liberty, without bill or petition, 'by summons before one of the Masters, upon affidavit 'of their claims, to call upon personal representatives 'to pay or secure the same.

"2. Assets being admitted, the Master shall have 'powers, in reference to ordering payment, &c., analo-'gous to those of the judges of the Small Debts and 'Demands Courts.

"3. Assets not being admitted, the Master shall have 'power to appoint a receiver, to direct a sale of all or 'any part of the assets, (the proceeds being paid into 'court to the credit of the matter), to advertise for cre-'ditors, legatees, next of kin, and to distribute the fund. '(See the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act).

"4. The Master's order of distribution shall bind all 'parties interested, in like manner as if such distribu-'tion were made by decree or order in a suit.

"5. The Master, at the request of parties dissatisfied 'with his decision, shall grant a certificate of such de-'cision, with the evidence and grounds upon which he 'has proceeded; and such parties shall be at liberty 'to apply to the Court, upon the footing of such certi-'ficate, and without objections or exceptions, to reverse 'or alter the Master's decision."

We can only say, that, not holding our own speculations, as to the reform of pleadings, to be perfect,—not holding Mr. Cooper's, as to the reform of proceedings in and out of the Master's office, to be perfect,—we think that both are in the right direction; and we trust, ere long, to see "Chancery" so revised and reformed, that the mere statement that an estate is "in Chancery" will not elicit, as it did, not long ago, in the House of Commons, a universal laugh. When, as is the fact, the most ordinary motion for a special injunction, with a bill of less than eighty folios in length, and not more than forty folios of evidence, costs a plaintiff something like 30 guineas,—when such a motion, with an average of length of pleadings and evidence, will cost each party at the least 60 guineas,—when merely reviving a suit, abated by the death of a defendant, will cost the plaintiff upwards of 8 guineas,—and when it is recollected, that these are but little steps in the great operation called a Chancery suit, and that the last of them at least may occur many times during its progress,—it is not too much to say, that such costly machinery is not, in its present state, adapted to the wants of a large class of society, and must be grievously defective somewhere, to be so costly.

LONDON, MAY 12, 1849.

We are glad to perceive that a subject which has been again and again brought forward in The Jurist, viz. the extension of the sphere of action of the county courts, by giving to them an equity jurisdiction, is beginning to be noticed publicly by other lawyers *. Why these courts had not such a jurisdiction when they were created, is difficult to understand; and it is satisfactory to hear that there is, or is shortly to be, a legislative scheme for conferring it upon them. The propositions contained in the pamphlet referred to appear to us unnecessarily to complicate the matter; though on the principal point, which is the limit to be put upon the extent of the equitable jurisdiction of county courts, we agree with the writer, that the limit should be that mimimum of value at stake, below which no sane lawyer ever advises a client to go into Chancery.

Mr. Heberden's idea is, to give to county courts a jurisdiction in equity as to certain specific classes of subjects, such as to set aside deeds, &c. obtained by fraud, undue influence, &c.; to administer the estates of deceased persons; to enforce contracts; and to give relief on some other subjects of equitable jurisdiction. Now, to us it appears, that the mere simple and beneficial thing for the public would be to declare county courts broadly, courts of equity, with all the jurisdiction of the superior courts of equity; limiting only the range, as to value or other ground of measurement, within which the jurisdiction is to be exercised; for it is impossible to mention any subject on which great equitable disputes arise, on which, among the less wealthy classes, small ones do not also occur. Persons of small property enter into contracts for sales and leases of real estate or chattels; they make unintelligible wills; they pirate each others literary property; and they make settlements under which trustees cannot or will not act; they commit, in fact, exactly the same sins, and are guilty of exactly the same negligences, as their wealthier fellow-subjects, and require, therefore, exactly the same species of judicial assistance, only the subject-matter of their disputes and negligences cannot bear the cost of the judicial assistance afforded by a superior Court of Chancery. We should prefer, therefore, to see the county courts made simply courts of equity, with the same jurisdiction as the Court of Chancery. Of course much difference of opinion will prevail as to what should be the limit of jurisdiction in point of amount. For ourselves we should say, that wherever the property in dispute, or to be administered, does not exceed 150*l.*, it should be compulsory on parties to proceed in the county court; and that where it does not exceed 250*l.*, the county court should be capable of entertaining the suit by consent of both parties. For we are quite sure, that a disputed right of property of not more than 150*l.* in value, has no chance of ever passing through a superior court of equity into the hands of the rightful claimant, without such a diminution, in the shape of extra costs, even if he succeeds with costs, as to make it a victory scarcely worth the purchase; and we are equally sure, that any such litigation, when the costs are paid by the estate, will consume the whole subject-matter of dispute in the process of ascertaining the rights of the disputants. Mr. Heberden suggests, and, we think, wisely, that written pleadings and written evidence must not be used under an equity county court jurisdiction; meaning, we presume, by written pleadings and evidence, such as are used in Chancery. But we doubt the wisdom, or indeed the practicability, of dispensing with some specific forms of plaint and defence. A modification of the forms of proceeding already framed for, and adopted in, the county courts, adapting them to the purposes of an equitable jurisdiction, would not be a difficult task. But it will, we trust, be kept in mind by those to whom the preparation of any measure for giving equity jurisdiction to the county courts should be entrusted, that a considerable extent of precision in the form of proceeding will be as essential in the administration of equity between poor litigants as it is between rich ones. There is another point, to which we trust attention will be paid, and that is, the retention for the public of the services of really educated and respectable legal practitioners. It is a question, whether the effect of the present county courts jurisdiction would not be more beneficial to the public, if for demands at least above 10*l.* the scale of costs were such as to induce educated solicitors to practice in the county courts, or at least were not such as almost entirely to exclude them. The true principle has always appeared to us to be this: that either no agents at all should be employed, or that the properly educated and respectable practitioner alone should be employed. Hence, in certain cases, we should say, for common-law cases under 10*l.*, and in equity cases under 30*l.*, it should be compulsory on parties to conduct their own cases; they should not, in such cases, be allowed to appear by any person whatever. But in cases above the particular fixed minimum, the costs to be allowed in taxation should be such as to enable parties to avail themselves of the advice and assistance of professional men who have a professional reputation at stake. We trust, that, if the jurisdiction of the county courts be extended in amount at common law, and, in point of jurisdiction, to equity, this point will be kept in view. If it is not, the county courts will be less useful than they might be.

There is one other point, with respect to an equity jurisdiction, to which we would call the attention of the Profession, and that is, how the standard is to be fixed for cases where there is no positively ascertainable value at stake—such as cases of piracy, nuisance, and the like. These cases, we apprehend, might be dealt with by limiting the amount of the account which the defendant is to render, where, in Chancery, an account of profits would be ordered; and by fixing a particular amount of damages, beyond which the plaintiff should not be entitled to recover at law, if the case were one for recovering damages at law as well as for relief in equity. In cases of specific performance, there would be no difficulty. If the agreement were for a purchase at a given price, of course there could be none. If it were for a lease, the calculated value of the lease would afford the means of determining whether the case would fall within the prescribed standard of value. Neither could there be any great difficulty in framing forms of proceeding. The judges found none in adapting forms to the requirements of the present county courts jurisdiction; and we doubt not, that any of the equity judges, or, indeed, any two or three equity counsel of experience, would very easily frame rules and forms of procedure for suits in equity in the county courts.

A Summary of the Law of Attornies and Solicitors, &c. By Alexander Pulling, Esq., Barrister. [London: Butterworth, 1849.]

This will be found a very useful work to most young, and to many old, members of the junior branch of the Profession, whose rights, duties, and liabilities are much more extensive and multifarious than many imagine.

"The ordinary business of attornies and solicitors," says Mr. Pulling, "at the present day, extends over a 'very wide field; they are not only engaged in conducting the formal proceedings, both in civil and 'criminal cases, in our courts of justice, and in serving 'and receiving the requisite process, pleadings, and 'notices in such cases, and attending the courts, judges, 'and public offices, but the arduous and responsible 'duties devolve on them of previously investigating 'the matters in controversy, (by personal communication with the client they are retained for), collecting 'and analysing the evidence of the client's case, summoning the necessary witnesses, and taking down 'notes of the depositions preparatory to their being 'sworn and examined in the cause, preparing and delivering the briefs, &c. for the trial or hearing, and 'taking the necessary proceedings consequent on the 'judgment of the Court.

"In addition to these duties in courts of justice, 'this class of practitioners are also generally employed 'in soliciting business in Parliament, obtaining private 'acts, and attending Parliamentary committees, the 'Privy Council, &c., and acting as agents before the 'revenue and other public boards of commissioners, 'and generally on behalf of such public bodies, corporations, and public companies.

"It appears, moreover, to come within the legitimate and peculiar province of attornies and solicitors, 'at the present day, to draw and prepare agreements, 'wills, deeds, settlements, securities, and documents, '(though this was formerly considered out of their 'province), and also to conduct negotiations, procure 'and solicit loans, superintend the management of, and 'the letting, purchasing, and selling of property, estates 'and annuities; to collect and receive rents, debts, &c. 'invest and dispose of monies, and find sufficient secu'rities for such purposes; to investigate the titles to 'property offered as securities or investments; make 'arrangements between debtors and creditors, and par'ties in numerous other relations, domestic or commer'cial: thus acting generally in the distinct character 'of procurators, negotiators, conveyancers, confidential 'advisers, agents, stewards, receivers, collectors, &c., and 'performing a portion of the duties anciently devolved 'on scriveners."

From these positions, every one of which Mr. Pulling supports by a reference to authorities, it will be seen that the difficulty is rather to ascertain what is not than what is, proper professional business for an attorney or solicitor. Mr. Pulling explains very clearly to his readers at the outset, that he does not profess to soar into the regions of moral or intellectual advice for solicitors and attornies, but merely to inform them what is their exact status—what their duties, liabilities, rights, and privileges, legal and equitable. His work is, consistently with this plan, strictly a law book, and authorities are referred to in support of every material statement. We recommend particularly to the attention of young attornies the passages on t

LONDON, MAY 19, 1849.

The case of William Smith O'Brien has at length been determined by the Supreme Court of Appeal, and the result is, a decisive and unanimous judgment for the Crown. The Law Lords and the Judges, who presided in the House of Lords on this occasion, were so satisfied with the judgment below, that they affirmed it, without calling upon the counsel for the prosecution to address them. They considered that there was not even a primâ facie case for an appeal established; and, with much eulogium upon the manner in which the Irish judges had disposed of the numerous questions submitted to them, upheld, in every particular, their decision.

The objections raised by the plaintiff in error were four in number. They will be found stated at length in one of our former numbers, (12 Jur. p. 489), and it will be sufficient now to refer to them briefly. The first objection was to the caption of the indictment, which recited a commission to three judges, by name, empowering them, "with others," to try the prisoners. Only the three judges named, in fact, did try them, and it was urged that they had not authority for this purpose, especially in the absence of a quorum clause: but the House of Lords decided that the three judges had such authority; that the direction to them by name was sufficiently certain, and was not rendered uncertain by the part which followed as to others being joined with them.

The second error assigned, and the most important in the opinion of the counsel for the prisoner, was, that he had not been furnished with a copy of the indictment and a list of the witnesses ten days before the trial, according to the stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 6. This objection, which was raised with so much practical success in Frost's case, (2 Mood. C. C. 140; 9 C. & P. 129), was now held untenable, as the statute does not apply to treason committed in Ireland. A question naturally arises connected with this part of the case, whether, if such a privilege be required by persons accused of treason in England, it should not be extended, by statute, to those who are accused of a similar offence in Ireland? The view entertained by the House of Lords with regard to this objection rendered it unnecessary for them to decide whether it should have been raised by plea or by motion to the Court. In Frost's case, it was decided that it was too late to take the objection after plea pleaded, and that, if taken in due time, its only effect would be a postponement of the trial, in order to give time for a proper delivery of the list and copy.

The third error assigned was, that to levy war against the Queen in Ireland, was not to do so within "this realm," according to the stat. 25 Edw. 3, (on which it was contended the sixth count was founded); but that statute was held to have been extended to Ireland by Poyning's Acts.

Fourthly, it was urged that the "allocutus" was defective, as the prisoner was asked what he had to say why "judgment" should not be passed upon him, whereas it was contended, that he should have been asked why "judgment of death" should not be passed upon him; but this was held to be sufficient, as by "judgment" was intended the sentence allotted by law to the offence.

Such is the final result of a case which has naturally excited much interest both within and beyond the legal profession. It was, we believe, the general impression among lawyers that the writ of error would fail; but it is satisfactory to know that the learned Lords to whom the appeal was made were unanimous in their judgment, and that it was delivered in a manner and under circumstances calculated to encourage confidence in the administration of justice. An opinion has for some time prevailed in the public mind, that any conviction in a criminal case, which could be carried to the House of Lords, might be nullified. The case of O'Brien v. The Queen will operate favourably in changing this opinion.

THE CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

We have before us a bill which is proceeding in the right direction with respect to the simplification of Chancery proceedings, and in particular with respect to the conferring of an equity jurisdiction upon County Courts. It is intituled, "A Bill for facilitating and better securing the due Administration of Charitable Trusts;" and the following is the printed summary of the clauses:—

Interpretation clause; 37.

Act may be amended or repealed; 38.

The scope of this bill is to transfer the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over charities, where the clear yearly income of a charity shall not exceed 30*l.*, to the County Court within whose district the objects or purposes of the charity shall be, (clause 8); and whenever the income of a charity shall exceed 30*l.*, but not exceed 100*l.*, then to work the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery entirely in the Master's office, upon a petition, supported by affidavit, not requiring any order of reference, nor any order confirming the Master's report: in fact, substituting the Master (with certain qualifications) for the Court.

The process under this act would be, for the larger class of charities within it, to present a petition to the Court of Chancery or to the Master of the Rolls, setting forth the facts of the case constituting the ground of application, and praying the desired relief. Thereupon, without special order, but by force of the act the matter stands referred to the Master, who will therefore proceed, and make such orders upon the petition as the Court might now make in a suit regularly constituted, (sect. 2); and this he may do upon the petition, without any state of facts or proposal unless he shall think it necessary to have such state of facts or proposal, (sect. 6). We are glad to see here proposed to the consideration of the Legislature a plan which we, some time ago, advocated in The Jurist viz. the abandonment, at least in certain cases in the Master's office, of the "state of facts;" a document which is generally, as we conceive, surplusage if well drawn, and an impediment if ill drawn.

The 6th section of this act is so important, as containing the germs of an improvement on the proceedings in the Master's office, that we will cite it verbatim. It is as follows:—

"Be it enacted, that, subject to any orders made by the Lord Chancellor, as herein provided, the Master may, in proceeding under this act, proceed on a copy of the petition, without any state of facts or proposal in writing, unless, for supplying any deficiency in the statement or prayer of the petition, or otherwise, he shall fit and direct that any statement or proposal be made by any party; and the Master may, as he may see fit, dispense with any warrants in the course of the proceedings, and also, from time to time, direct any warrants to be taken out by any parties attending the proceedings, and fix the times at which any warrants shall be returnable before him, or at which any proceedings necessary to be taken shall be taken, and may proceed de die in diem, and generally may, without reference to any rule or course of practice of the Court, regulate the course of such proceedings in such manner as may appear to him expedient for rendering the same inexpensive and speedy, so far as justice will admit."

Now, it is impossible not to see, that under this section the Master may regulate, nay, is probably intended to make the experiment of regulating, the proceedings, so as to dispense with the time-destroying system of short and separate attendances, and to have the case brought before him and disposed of in the manner most calculated to save time and expense. Under this act, therefore, an experiment may be made, in reference to one class of subjects of equitable adjudication, which, if successful in that, may, and must be, applied further.

The 8th section broadly transfers to the County Courts the jurisdiction now exercised by the Court of Chancery, over charities whose income does not exceed 30*l.*, subject, however, by the 9th, to a stay of proceedings in the matter of appointing a new trustee, if any existing trustee shall give notice of his wish to have the matter heard by a Master of the Court of Chancery; subject also, by the 12th, to an appeal to the Court of Chancery, if the judge of the County Court shall think the case a fit one for appeal.

The bill contains a considerable number of clauses for carrying out its general purposes, and they appear to us to be generally well constructed for the purpose. There is one clause, however, which, having regard to the peculiar enactments of the County Courts Act with respect to costs, does not seem to us sufficiently explicit. We allude to the 32nd, by which it is enacted, "that any judge of the Court of Chancery, where there is any proceeding before such judge under this act, and the Master in the case of a petition which stands referred to him under this act, and the judge of the county court upon application to him under this act, shall have full power to make such order as to costs in the matter of the charity as they respectively may think fit." Now, recollecting the stringent enactments of the County Courts Act with regard to costs, and observing that, in the present bill, there is nothing specifically and pointedly repealing those enactments, it appears to us that the 32nd section of this bill does not sufficiently point out whether the power given, is, to adjudicate between the parties and the estate as to costs, or to determine what costs are to be allowed. If it is meant that costs should be allowed according to the Chancery scale, subject to any variation the judge may think fit to introduce, the clause does not express that with sufficient clearness. If it be meant that the judge is to have a sort of original power of awarding or disallowing costs at his pleasure pro hâc vice, neither is that intention, supposing it to be politic, expressed with sufficient clearness. As the County Courts Act is precise about costs, so should this, which brings before those courts new matter of a very different kind from that which is the present subject of their jurisdiction, be precise on the point, whether it adopts the present county court system of costs or any other. The 33rd clause, giving power to the Lord Chancellor, with the assistance of the Master of the Rolls or of a Vice-Chancellor, to make rules and orders of practice, does not construe the 32nd, because it leaves unexplained the question, whether the 32nd does or does not override the explicit declarations of the County Courts Act as to costs.

There is also an omission which appears to us important. There is now in the Court of Chancery, at various stages of progress, a considerable number of suits founded on information or petition relating to charities, which would be within the proposed act; and many of such suits, particularly those founded on informations where the income is under 30*l.*, stagnate simply because of the smallness of the fund, and will, if ever they come to a conclusion, absorb nearly the fee simple of the charity. The proposed act should, it seems to us, provide for the transfer to the new jurisdiction, of all existing suits which would, if not existing, be properly instituted under it.

With these exceptions, the bill is, in our opinion, excellent in its objects and explicit in its language; and we wish it success, as the first step towards an equity county court jurisdiction.

Gray's Inn, May 14.—Notice is given (with the sanction of the Treasurer and Benchers of this society) that there will be a voluntary examination for honours in the English laws of real property, in the hall of Gray's Inn, in Trinity Term, namely, on Thursday, 7th June next, at ten o'clock A.M. All students for the Bar will be qualified to stand on this occasion. The names of the successful candidates alone will appear in the class list, so that those who do not think proper to go in for honours, or who do not succeed, will not be prejudiced. The gentleman who attains the first place in the class list will receive the "lecturer's prize," consisting of a set of the Reports of Vesey, jun., (20 vols.), provided the standard of merit reached be not inadequate, in the opinion of the examiners, to entitle the candidate to distinction.

LONDON, MAY 26, 1849.

Recently, in one of the courts of common law, on certain demurrers being called on, and the counsel instructed in support of them not appearing, the Judges were urgent upon the counsel for the plaintiffs, to ask for judgment, which those counsel declined to do; on which the cases were struck out of the paper. Of course they must be again set down, and again work their way up to the head of the list in their turn, to the great delay, no doubt, of the parties. The learned Judges took occasion to suggest that it would be better for the parties, (which may or may not be the case), and better for the Junior Bar, (which it undoubtedly would be), if, when counsel are instructed in support of demurrers and cannot attend, they were to hand over their briefs to some counsel less harassed with business. Their Lordships also took occasion severely to comment on the practice of counsel accepting more briefs than they can attend to—a somewhat unfair way of stating the case, seeing that counsel do not regulate the period of the sittings nor the length of cases, and have no very accurate means of ascertaining whether they will or will not be able to attend to argue the cases intrusted to them.

We should have thought the Judges, who have all, or almost all, been in their time fully employed barristers, must have known and would have recollected this; but no doubt the warmth of the ermine, and the comfortable repose of the judicial cushion, exercise on the mind that species of influence at once soporific and illuminating, under which it forgets that it once took part in the turmoils of forensic life, and clearly sees that to be iniquity which, while itself dazzled and blinded by the multitude of briefs, it took for every-day and proper practice.

We have before discussed the question of the responsibility of counsel in accepting briefs on which it may be out of their power to attend; and we have shewn that, under the present arrangements of judicial business, and with the present habits of clients, of preferring the uncertain attendance of the most eminent men, to the certain attendance of men of an inferior degree of reputation, the evil is unavoidable. But we do not at all say that the evil ought not to be, or that it may not be, in some manner cured or diminished.

The course adopted by the Judges on the occasion referred to would, if steadily persevered in, have considerable effect; though adopted occasionally, and under the influence of a sort of momentary indignation, it does no good whatever. But if it were the regular course of the Court and of every Court, whenever a cause, or any substantial proceeding, is regularly called on or brought before the Court, to insist upon its being disposed of, or otherwise struck out of the paper, to find its way up again as best it might, there can be no doubt that parties would require their attornies to secure the attendance of counsel, either by retaining more than one counsel, or by retaining counsel not so excessively loaded with business as to be uncertain at any hour of any given day of their whereabouts. This course would not, however, suffice, because nothing can totally destroy the sort of gambling spirit which pervades attornies and their clients, as well as other classes of human beings, exhibiting itself in the particular instance, in preferring the chance of the most eminent counsel to the certainty of the second or third in eminence.

If the evil is of sufficient magnitude to require cure, instead of mere palliation, the source of it must be removed; and that can only be done in one of two ways —either by not having concurrent sittings of two or more courts in which the same counsel may practise, or by restricting, by authority, the right of counsel to practise in more than one, or, at the very utmost, two courts. Either of these courses appears to us extremely objectionable, and the first absolutely impracticable; for the short reason, that the business of the country requires that all the courts of similar jurisdiction should be kept employed as constantly as possible. It would, therefore, be absurd for the Court of Queen's Bench to stop in order that the Common Pleas may begin, or that four of the Judges of a court should be doing nothing while there was work to be done, in order to allow the fifth to be trying causes at Nisi Prius. The second remedy, viz. to compel counsel to select one or two courts, and not to allow them to be heard in any other, would be a little arbitrary as against the Bar: but of the rights or claims of the Bar no man ever takes account; and if public good were attained by it, the arbitrariness of the proceeding would not prevent its adoption. But the question is, would the public be benefited by it? The result would, of course, be, to some extent, to contract the right of selection by the client of his counsel—a result necessarily injurious, unless it be assumed that every court would attract a Bar of equal ability. At present, the system adopted by leading counsel, of confining themselves to one or two courts, works well, because the choice of the client is left, in effect, free, since, with very few exceptions, the advocacy of particular counsel may be obtained out of the courts in which they habitually practise; while, on the other hand, clients may, in all ordinary cases, be certain of the presence of their leading counsel. If the rule were compulsory, it may be questioned whether the public would not be the first to complain of being driven to select in each court from a particular and numerically small Bar.

We are afraid, on the whole, that only palliations can be compulsorily applied, so long as the public desires perfect freedom of selection; and that the only course from which considerable benefit will result, is that of the Judges uniformly requiring cases to be heard and disposed of, or struck out of the paper.

A Treatise on the Law and Practice of Injunctions. By Charles Stewart Drewry, Esq., Barrister at Law. [S. Sweet, 1841.]

A Supplement to the Law and Practice of Injunctions. By Charles Stewart Drewry, Esq., Barrister at Law. Containing the Cases decided since 1841. [S. Sweet, 1849.]

Notwithstanding the acknowledged excellence of Mr. Eden's Treatise on the Law of Injunctions, Mr. Drewry says truly in his Preface, "It is scarcely necessary to offer any apology for the publication of a new work on a subject which has only been treated by one learned writer, and that more than twenty years ago. The great extension, during the intervening period, of the subjects to which the relief by injunction is applicable, and the consequent addition to the collection of cases, illustrating the law on this head of equity, have appeared to the writer to make it probable that an Essay on the Law and Practice of Injunctions would now be acceptable to the Profession." The manner in which Mr. Drewry has accomplished his undertaking fully justifies his attempt.

Mr. Drewry has divided his subject into three parts: the first, treating of staying proceedings at law and in other courts; the second, of injunctions to stay wrongful acts of a special nature; and the third, of the practice in matters of injunction. Part I is divided into four chapters, treating of—1. Injunctions to stay proceedings at law where the legal title of the defendant in equity is founded originally on some inequitable transaction, or is against public policy; or where, although the legal title of the defendant in equity may not have been originally inequitable, it has been tainted with fraud, actual or constructive, by the subsequent conduct of the party claiming under it. 2. Injunctions to stay proceedings at law where the plaintiff in equity has some equitable right to set up against the plaintiff at law, of which the Court of law cannot, either by reason of want of jurisdiction, or by reason of its forms of proceeding, take cognisance; or where the legal right of the plaintiff at law is coupled with, and abridged by, some equitable liability. 3. Where relief is sought against forfeiture, or penalties incurred by the breach of covenants, or the neglect of other legal liabilities. 4. The jurisdiction in general. The subjects in Part II are—1. Injunctions against waste. 2. Injunctions to restrain infringement of copyright. 3. Injunctions to restrain infringement of patents. 4. Injunctions to restrain the publication of secret inventions, and the use of another's name or designation, and the imitation of trade marks. 5. Injunctions to restrain nuisance. 6. Injunctions in aid of specific performance, and to restrain breach of trust or confidence. 7. Injunctions between partners. 8. Injunctions relating to canal, railway, and other public companies. 9. Injunctions in matters of bankruptcy. 10. Injunctions to remove outstanding terms for years and other legal impediments. 11. Injunctions in interpleader suits. 12. The jurisdiction in general to grant injunctions to stay wrongful acts of a special nature. Part III treats of—1. The mode of obtaining injunctions. 2. Extending the common injunction to stay trial. 3. The effect on injunctions of amendments, and of reviving an injunction. 4. Breach of an injunction, and its consequences. 5. The practice in dissolving injunctions.

Subjects which, like that of injunctions, involve the consideration both of general principles of equity and of special rules of practice, are seldom very happily or adequately expounded in text-books. Either the author has a practical turn, and neglects principle, and so produces a guide which is scarcely a guide at all in novel cases, or he has a genius or taste above the petty details of practice, and soars continually in the region of generalities, descanting in strains of pure logic, little to the delight, and less to the edification, of the humble practitioner, who desires a plain rule of thumb for his own guidance, and, in all cases to which that is inapplicable, puts himself under the pilotage of counsel. Mr. Drewry, however, either by keeping a severe curb upon his ardour for speculation, or from possessing an equal taste for the abstract and the useful, has contrived to avoid both errors, and administers theoretical and practical information, alternately or duly combined, with considerable tact and discretion, according to the exigences of the subject in hand.

To the circumstance, that the species of injunction called a common injunction is most generally obtained in suits where the object is to stay proceedings at law, "it is probably owing," observes Mr. Drewry, "that the 'common injunction is sometimes distinguished as that 'which is granted to stay proceedings at law. That is 'not, however, the true distinctive character of the com-'mon injunction; for, though the common injunction is 'never applied to stay waste and similar injuries to pro-'perty, the special injunction is frequently applied to 'stay proceedings at law. The true distinction between 'the common and the special injunction is, that the 'former is obtained when the defendant has made de-'fault, as a common order, or order of course, to which 'no opposition can be offered; whereas the latter is al-'ways obtained on merits, and never as an order of 'course." (Introduction, note (b)).

The general principle upon which the Court of Chancery interferes has been said to be restrictive, not mandatory. And it has been said, that equity has not jurisdiction to compel, on motion, the performance of a substantive act, such as the removal of a work already executed. But in many cases a similar result can be obtained by framing the order in that form to which the term mandatory injunctions has been given. In Mr. Drewry's book and the Supplement, the cases on this important subject, down to the present time, will be found fully and satisfactorily stated. This subject was treated by Mr. Eden with his usual learning and ability; so well, indeed, that the author of the chapter on Injunctions in Mr. Daniell's Chancery Practice, no doubt feeling that it would be difficult to improve upon it, transferred Mr. Eden's property bodily into his work*, without an acknowledgment of the source whence he took it. He does, indeed, in the reference to the manuscript report of the case of Worden v. Ellers, which Mr. Eden cited (in his book on Injunctions, p. 199) from Serjeant Hill's manuscripts, subjoin to the reference to Serjeant Hill's manuscripts, "Eden on Injunctions, 199." But this is merely the place where Mr. Eden first cited the case of Worden v. Ellers, with reference to a different point, and has nothing to do with the subject-matter of the passage, which, with the alteration of a word or two, has been taken from Eden on Injunctions, pp. 330, 331, beginning with the words "There is, indeed, a passage in the manuscript report of the case of Worden v. Ellers," [which in Eden is, "There is, indeed, a passage in one of the manuscript reports of Worden v. Ellers"], and ending with the words "removal of a stopgate." We beg leave to enter our solemn protest against this mode of making books. Niebuhr laid down a rule of never even giving a reference which he had not discovered himself, without citing the author who directed him to it. Between Niebuhr and Lord Campbell's notions of the rationale of appropriation morals there are probably many degrees. As, in citing the case of Worden v. Ellers, the writer above referred to has mentioned Eden as the author who directed him to the manuscript report of the case, it is not improbable that the printing of the passage from Eden, without a proper mark to denote it as a quotation from that learned writer, is an oversight; if so, we trust it will be remedied in the next edition, that a work of such authority may not be added to the already too large list of examples (some of them prerogative instances of successful dishonesty and triumphant meanness) of the invasion of literary property.

The conduct of those who appropriate, without acknowledgment, another man's thoughts and labours, presents the converse case to that of those persons who vend certain pills, which they represent as those of some eminent physician, whose name they give to their pills. We give Mr. Drewry's remarks on a case of this kind, (Clark v. Freeman, 12 Jur. 149; Mr. Drewry's Supplement, p. 34), where an eminent physician, who was not in the habit of making medicines for sale, filed his bill for an injunction to restrain A. from vending certain pills, which he represented as the plaintiff's, so as to hold out that they were compounded by, and sold on behalf of, the plaintiff. The Court refused an injunction, holding, that the case was defamation, if anything; that equity could not determine whether it was so or not; and that it could not be considered at all made out that the act of the defendant could be any injury to the property of the plaintiff. "The decision," observes Mr. Drewry, "is 'at least singular, and seems founded on an exaggerated 'idea of the impregnability of a high professional re-'putation. That the act of the defendant amounted 'to a fraudulent use of the plaintiff's name cannot be 'doubted; neither can there be much doubt that the 'plaintiff might be injured, in reference to property, by 'such fraudulent act, since it is tolerably clear, that, if 'the public believed the pills were compounded by the 'plaintiff, they would or might be induced to buy the 'pills instead of consulting him." (Supplement, p. 34). But might it not be put on higher ground—that the representation that a physician sold pills in this manner was calculated to injure his character, by placing him in the light of an advertising quack or charlatan?—which, we apprehend, would have a good deal more to do in keeping the public from consulting him, than the cause assigned in the passage quoted.

We have great doubts as to the accuracy of Mr. Drewry's view of the case of Williams v. Williams, (15 Ves. 419; 12 East, 209). Mr. Drewry says, (p. 160)—

"There is also, now, strong ground for conceiving, 'that where there is tenant in tail after possibility of 'issue extinct in remainder, who has never been tenant 'in tail in possession, such tenant may cut timber, and 'is entitled to it when cut. This point was, in effect, 'decided at law in Williams v. Williams, (12 East, '209), in which the limitations material to this point 'were to the husband for life, without impeachment; 'remainder to trustees to preserve; remainder to the 'wife for life for her jointure; remainder to the sons 'successively, and the heirs male of their bodies; re-'mainder to the daughters in like manner; in default 'of such issue, remainder to the heirs of the bodies of 'the husband and wife. The husband died without 'issue. Lord Eldon doubted whether the wife was 'tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, within 'the reasoning of the old cases, in none of which, his 'Lordship said, tenant in tail after possibility was said 'to be dispunishable of waste, where that tenant had 'not been once tenant in tail with the other donee in 'possession. A case was directed to the Court of King's 'Bench, who certified, first, that the wife was unim-'peachable of waste; secondly, that, having cut tim-'ber, she was entitled to the timber as her own pro'perty; thirdly, that she became tenant in tail after 'possibility of issue extinct.

"The third answer clearly does not meet the diffi- 'culty suggested by Lord Eldon, who did not doubt, 'that, under such limitations, she would be tenant in 'tail after possibility of issue extinct, in some sense; 'but whether there was not a distinction between a 'tenant in tail in remainder who had, and one who 'never had had, the inheritance in possession. But, al- 'though the point raised by Lord Eldon does not seem 'to have been argued in the Court of King's Bench, '(12 East, 209), yet, as the limitations were before the 'Court, and as, having those limitations before them, 'the judges were of opinion that the wife was unim- 'peachable of waste; it is to be presumed, that, as 'regards liability to waste at least, there is no distinc- 'tion between a person taking under such a limitation, 'and a tenant in tail after possibility, who has been in 'possession."

Now, it is to be observed, that, in this case, the limitation being to the husband for life, without impeachment of waste, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail male, remainder to the first and other daughters, remainder to the heirs of the bodies of the husband and wife, remainder to the right heirs of the husband, upon the death of her husband the wife became seised for life, with an immediate remainder in tail to her and her husband while there was a possibility of issue of the marriage, there being here neither, as in Lewis Bowles's case, a vested estate tail, nor, as in the usual form, a remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders interposed between the wife's life estate and the remainder in tail. Here, moreover, the remainder in tail in the issue was always in contingency, there having been no issue born. Consequently, during the period when the tenant for life had such immediate remainder in tail, and before the tenancy in tail after possibility of issue extinct arose, a merger of her life estate in such immediate tenancy in tail took place. Therefore, during an interval of some months between her husband's death and the extinction of the possibility of issue by her said husband, she became tenant in tail in possession; and, therefore, this case cannot be considered as deciding that tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, who has never been tenant in tail in possession, may cut timber, and is entitled to it when cut*. The above view appears to be supported by the opinion of Mr. Fearne. Under a limitation to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the bodies of the husband and wife, "I apprehend," says Mr. Fearne, (Cont. Rem. 63, 8th edit.), "the husband and wife taking distinct and successive estates for life, the joint limitation to the heirs of their bodies would not have been executed in them in possession, but would have been vested in them jointly as a remainder in tail; that this remainder, surviving to the wife upon the decease of her husband, would have merged her estate for life, so as to make her tenant in tail in possession; but she, having had no issue by her deceased husband, or such issue being then extinct, would thereby have become only tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct."

The great fault of Mr. Drewry's original book, the deficiency of the index, has been remedied in the Supplement, which contains a new and full index to the original, as well as the new matter; so that it will now be found to be a very useful as well as sound and complete practical book.

* The above reasoning is, in substance, taken from the discussion of the case of Williams v. Williams, in Mr. Bisset's Treatise on the Law of Estates for Life. (Pp. 22—31).

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.
"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.
"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, JUNE 2, 1849.

The question of the liability of a witness for not attending on his subpœna, in a case where the party for whom he is subpœnaed has not a good cause of action or ground of defence, was fully discussed in Cowling v. Coxe, (ante, p. 101). That was an action on the case against a witness for disobeying his subpœna; and the declaration stated, that certain issues were joined in the original suit, that the plaintiff had a good cause of action therein, and that the evidence of the defendant was material to the trial of the said issues. A traverse, that the plaintiff had a good cause of action, was found for the defendant; the other issues, including one to the effect that the defendant's testimony was material, were decided in favour of the plaintiff; and he now moved for a repleader, or judgment non obstante veredicto, as regarded the issue found for the defendant. After time taken for consideration, the Court granted a rule absolute for entering judgment non obstante veredicto, on the ground, that, since the statute of Anne, allowing several pleas, a party, although having no cause of action, may sustain damage, in respect of costs, by the absence of a witness whose testimony is material on any one of the several issues. It was conceded, that, to maintain an action for disobedience to a subpœna, it is essential that the plaintiff should have sustained damage; that, where only one issue was joined, a plaintiff, who had no cause of action, could not, under ordinary circumstances, have sustained damage by the non-attendance of a witness, nor could the evidence be material. This, it was said, was the foundation of many decisions, to the effect, that, in this class of cases, it must have appeared, expressly or by implication, that the plaintiff had a good cause of action.

It was contended in argument, that the plaintiff, having sued orginally without having a good cause, was guilty of a wrong, for which, under the old law, he might be amerced; and, therefore, had no right to sue for a loss occasioned by his own wrong. This argument, however, did not prevail with the Court.

A question of practical importance was also decided in this case, namely, that judgment non obstante veredicto will be awarded where there is an immaterial issue found for the defendant, although the plea involved in it does not admit a cause of action, by way of confession and avoidance, and although, in fact, it be (as it was in this case) a plea by way of traverse, provided the material parts of the pleadings enable the Court to give judgment without requiring the parties to re-plead in order to shew on which side the right is. It is evident that the cause of action may be sufficiently admitted for this purpose, even by the material parts of the declaration being left untraversed; for though "they are not thereby admitted for all purposes and in all events, yet they may be considered as conditionally admitted—that is, admitting the allegations not traversed in case the plaintiff can prove the allegations traversed." (Per Lord Denman, in Cowling v. Coxe).

This decision is consistent with the judgment in Pim v. Grazebrook, (2 C. B. 429), in which it was said, that a plaintiff is never entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto, upon the ground of the insufficiency of the defendant's pleadings, unless the plea or rejoinder implies an admission of the plaintiff's title, which a traverse by the defendant does not; but if the traverse be of immaterial allegations in the declaration, such allegations may be considered as struck out of the declaration, and, with them, the traverses and the finding thereon, must fall to the ground.

RESTRAINT UPON ALIENATION.

If lands, rent, advowsons, or anything capable of being the subject of inheritance, be conveyed or devised in fee, upon condition that they should not be aliened to any person, this is a void condition, as being repugnant to the gift, and "against trade and traffic, and contracting between man and man." (Co. Litt. 223. a.)

"And so it is if a man be possessed of a lease for years, or of a horse, or of any other chattel, real or personal, and give or sell his whole interest or property therein, upon condition that the donee or vendee shall not alien the same; the condition is void." (Co. Litt. ubi sup.; Churchill v. Marks, 1 Coll. C. C. 441).

It is the same if a life estate in realty or personalty be limited by will or settlement, with a proviso that it shall determine on alienation; such proviso is repugnant and void. (Roper on Legacies, vol. 1, p. 786; Lord v. Bunn, 2 You. & C. C. C. 98; Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 429; Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 66).

However, although the condition not to alien attached to an estate is void, the same end may be attained by a limitation over on the event of alienation; and the legality of this limitation is so thoroughly established, that courts of equity will construe a proviso against alienation, with a gift over on that event, as equivalent to a limitation to one until he alien, and, in that case, a limitation over. (Doumett v. Bedford, 6 T. R. 602, cited Hale, 13 Ves. 404; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 3 Swanst. 515; Yarnold v. Moorhouse, 1 R. & M. 364; Lewes v. Lewes, 6 Sim. 304; Brandon v. Aston, 2 You. & C. C. C. 24; Kearsly v. Woodcock, 3 Hare, 185). And this construction is made whether the proviso in this form be contained in a will or settlement. (Lord v. Bunn, 2 You. & C. C. C. 98).

To take one of the preceding cases as an illustration of this latitude of construction. In Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, (ubi sup.), the limitation was by will, of freehold and leasehold estates, to trustees and their heirs, &c., upon trust, subject to certain annuities, for T. H. W., for life, with remainder over; and the will contained a proviso, that the estate so given was upon the express condition, that, in case T. H. W. should assign, dispose of, or otherwise charge his life estate, so as not to be entitled to the profit, receipt, use, and enjoyment thereof, then and from thenceforth that estate should devolve upon the person next entitled thereto, as mentioned in the will. T. H. W. became bankrupt, and the limitation over, it was decided, took effect upon his bankruptcy. Sir Thomas Plumer, in giving judgment, is reported to say, "With respect to the validity of a proviso, it is clear, that a testator may thus modify the estate he gives; for though, in a case which has been mentioned, (Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 429), it is stated, as the opinion of a very great judge, that, if an estate is given for life, the incidents to a life estate cannot be taken away; and though it is better, therefore, when such a limitation is intended to give the estate until bankruptcy or alienation, and not first to give it for life, and then to prohibit the attempt to alien; yet this is answered by considering, that, in a will, any condition or modification may be annexed which does not offend against any rule of law; and it is immaterial by what form of words the intention is executed, whether by a devise until the devisee shall have charged or incumbered it, or by a proviso with a limitation over upon such an event. Each mode is equally valid and of the same effect."

In leases for years, a proviso, that the lessor shall re-enter in case of the lessee assigning his estate, has long been held good; and yet this is a simple condition in restraint of alienation, and must be considered a direct exception to the rule. (Blencowe v. Bugby, 3 Wils. 234; Hunter v. Galliers, 2 T. R. 133; Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. 395).

In strict principle, if a condition restraining alienation be void because it is contrary to the policy of the law that alienation, being a natural incident of property, should be entirely forbidden, conditional limitations, to take effect upon alienation, should be void also; for it is obvious, that the effect upon the owner of the property must be the same, whether it reverts to the grantor, or is limited over in case he should break the condition. Either form of limitation must equally deprive the owner of one of the incidents of his property. In other cases, where the event will not support a condition as being contrary to policy, neither will it support a conditional limitation. For example: if the gift be to one of property, with a limitation over in case he should not receive or dispose of it, this is as invalid as though it were a mere condition. (Ross v. Ross, 1 J. & W. 154; Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 478). Moreover, the objection that creditors are defrauded by a condition which deprives a man, upon bankruptcy or insolvency, of the property which enables him to appear like a man of substance at the time they trusted him, applies with equal force to a conditional limitation. The injury to his creditors is the same whether the debtor's property is or is not limited over on the event of his being bankrupt or insolvent. If limitations over on alienation are allowed to defeat life interest in property, it follows they must equally be lawful to defeat absolute interests in personalty or estates in fee-simple, if confined to the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities. Accordingly, in Churchill v. Marks, (ubi sup.), there was a bequest of stock to the children of C. who should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one, as tenants in common equally, no child to sell or part with his share or interest in the money till it should be divided, and, on proof of his having done so, his share was to become the property of the other children. One child became insolvent before the stock was divided, and it was held, that the gift over took effect. In the same case the reporter states, that, "in the course of the argument, an eminent conveyancer, in answer to a question put to him by the Court, stated his opinion that a gift to A. in fee, with a proviso, that, if A. alien in B.'s lifetime, the estate shall shift to B., is valid. Of course, it is intended that this limitation must be by way of use in a deed. This is, no doubt, the necessary consequence of the decisions referred to; but it may be questioned whether judicial authority on the subject is consistent with strict principle.

On the whole, we must regret that more attention has not been paid to the warning contained in the concluding sentence of the note to Co. Litt. 223. b.:—"The illusory nature of estates and trusts of this description raises a powerful objection to them, on the ground of policy; nor are they, perhaps, quite reconcileable to some of the fundamental principles of our law. Serious consequences, it is presumed, would ensue from their coming into general or even frequent use."

The consequences that have already followed the departure from principle, as we have endeavoured to shew, are not insignificant; and we think that, allowing some few exceptions—as the proviso against anticipation of a married woman's separate estate during coverture, (Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 My. & C. 405), and a limitation over, for her benefit, of her husband's interest in her settled property, in case he should become bankrupt, (Lester v. Garland, 1 Mont. 471)—the rule, that property should not, by any device, be deprived of its alienable character, should have been preserved inviolate, as most consistent with the mutual interests and relations of mankind. A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the "Common-law Commissioners" suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develope. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on "Modern Pleading," as incident to the above "rules," and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy "reports." The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuriâ in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

INVALID LIVES.
In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 35l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

ONE-HALF THE FIRST FIVE ANNUAL PREMIUMS MAY REMAIN AS A PERMANENT CHARGE UPON THE POLICY. The premiums under the age of 45 years are 10 per cent. below the usual rates, thus giving an immediate bonus of £100 upon every £1000 insured, in addition to future bonuses.

LONDON, JUNE 9, 1849.

There can be no doubt, firstly, that expectancies or possibilities may be effectually dealt with in equity, provided there is a proper consideration; secondly, that they cannot be the subject of purely voluntary assignment. The only difficulty is, to ascertain what is such a consideration as will support an equitable assignment of a possibility.

The cases of Harwood v. Tooke (2 Sim. 192) and Wetherhed v. Wetherhed (2 Sim. 183) shew, that where each of several persons has a mere possibility, such as his expectation of gift or inheritance, an agreement between such persons to share in equal proportions whatever they may receive, will be supported in equity, not only when the arrangement is a family arrangement, but even when some of the parties are strangers in blood to the party from whom they have expectations. For the decision in Harwood v. Tooke, which was Lord Eldon's, no reason is given. In Wetherhed v. Wetherhed neither the arguments nor the judgment turn, in terms, upon the question of the consideration being valuable. The argument against the validity of the contract was principally based upon its being an underhand agreement to defeat parental authority; and to that point the judgment would seem to address itself; for the Vice-Chancellor says, "It is quite clear, that, if a testator meant that his devisee should have the personal enjoyment of his bounty, he might so devise as to stint the enjoyment of the devisee, and restrain him from aliening the subject of his gift; but that, if the testator did not so devise, it must be intended that he meant that his devisee should not be so stinted, but should have the full enjoyment of the property, and that it should be liable to all his antecedent debts, and all his antecedent contracts; and, therefore, that, where there was a general devise, it gave the devisee the property, liable to be incumbered in any way that the devisee might think proper, either before or after he took it."

It must, however, be concluded, from the language of the judgment, referring to debts, contracts, and incumbrances, that the Court considered the mutuality of the agreement as making it a contract, on both sides, for valuable consideration, so as to constitute the agreement of each an incumbrance upon his share.

Two recent cases (Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Phil. 342; and Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 201) have quite settled that an imperfect gift (and a merely voluntary assignment of a possibility is an imperfect gift) will not be perfected in equity. In Ward v. Audland there had been an assignment of a policy of insurance, a mortgage, and some household furniture, to a trustee, in trust for the settlor's nieces. On the death of the settlor the trustee insisted on his right to have the mortgage-debt, and the money secured by the policy, and the furniture. The executors refused to give them up; and the bill was filed to have the settlement carried into effect. The Court refused the relief prayed, on the ground, that if the assignment was complete, so as to vest any legal title in the plaintiff, he must proceed at law. If it was not, equity would not enforce an imperfect assignment in favour of volunteers. The Court, therefore, treated nieces as mere volunteers. In Meek v. Kettlewell the case was a settlement without valuable consideration, by the defendant, on the plaintiff, who was a stranger to her, of her interest, as next of kin to her daughter, in a certain sum, in case her daughter died without issue; and it was held, that the assignment could not be enforced. The language used by the Lord Chancellor might lead to the supposition that his Lordship meant to say, that none but a valuable consideration, as distinguished from a good or meritorious consideration, will suffice to support an assignment of a possibility. But we conceive his Lordship did not mean to overrule those cases in which a good or meritorious consideration has supported an equitable assignment, but only to lay down, that a purely voluntary assignment of an expectancy cannot be enforced.

The question, whether a meritorious consideration is sufficient to support an imperfect gift or an assignment of an expectancy, appears to be the subject of conflicting decision. The question came before Sir E. Sugden, L. C., in Ellis v. Nimmo, (L. & G. 333), and that learned judge held, that an agreement by a father, entered into after his daughter's marriage, to make a provision for her, would be carried into effect in equity. In his judgment he refers to several cases in which the Court had intimated, that a contract entered into upon a meritorious consideration, meaning thereby a contract in favour of a wife or child, would be enforced. (Colman v. Sarrel, 1 Ves. jun. 50; Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84). Singularly enough, the case of Wright v. Wright, (1 Ves. sen. 409), in which the point had arisen of an assignment of a possibility being enforced in equity, was not referred to in Ellis v. Nimmo; neither was it noticed in Holloway v. Headington, (8 Sim. 324), which will be presently referred to.

In Wright v. Wright there was a devise to the testator's two daughters: if either of them should die unmarried, his son Robert, or his heirs, should take, on paying 500*l.* to the other daughter. The son Robert, in the lifetime of his sisters, conveyed his interest to his younger son, in consideration of natural love. After the death of one of the daughters, the eldest son and heir of Robert filed his bill to have the estate, on payment of 500*l.* to the other daughter; and it was held that he was bound by his conveyance. The Lord Chancellor said the interest of Robert was a possibility which, at law, could not be granted or devised, and compared the case to that of a chose in action, which, though not assignable at law, may be assigned in equity for valuable consideration. And then he continued—"I agree, that, for some purposes, the present consideration is not so strong as that for money. If the question came to be between the child so advanced in love &c. and a creditor bonâ fide, the equity of the creditor will be superior to that of the child; but, as against any claiming voluntarily from the father, as executor, administrator, or heir-at-law, it is a consideration, and only made so in the second degree, where the question is with a creditor who is a purchaser." The decision seems, therefore, entirely based on the consideration of love and affection between father and child being sufficient to support in equity an assignment, which the Court admits would be, if purely voluntary, an imperfect gift, incapable of being perfected in equity.

Dillon v. Coppin, (4 My. & Cr. 645), which it was contended, in Withy v. Mangles, (10 Cl. & Fin. 215), overrules Ellis v. Nimmo, was a case of a totally different kind, having, as it seems to us, nothing to do with the doctrine of Ellis v. Nimmo. Dillon v. Coppin was the case of a deed-poll by a father in favour of his daughter, professing to assign certain property, viz. East India stock, which was incapable of passing by assignment. It was kept by the father during his life in his own possession, and the daughter never knew of its existence. The case was expressly decided on the authority of Antrobus v. Smith, (12 Ves. 39), and it is impossible not to see that a principal ingredient in the decision was the retention of the deed by the father. The Lord Chancellor expressly distinguished the case from one of contract. "Here," he said, "is no contract, but a deed-poll, professing to assign property incapable of passing by such assignment."

The case of Holloway v. Headington (8 Sim. 324) does not overrule, or affect to overrule, the case of Ellis v. Nimmo. In that case, the settlement made after marriage by husband and wife was in favour of the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children of the wife living at her death, to be begotten by her then present or any future husband. As regarded the wife's interest, therefore—and the bill was by her to have the trusts carried into execution—the settlement was purely voluntary, the love and affection for a wife clearly not constituting even a meritorious consideration. The children of the wife by any other marriage were also clearly mere volunteers, being strangers in blood to the husband, the real settlor; and the only parties on whose behalf a meritorious consideration could be set up were the children, who were contingently interested only, and who, whether they could or not have sued, did not sue. Framed, therefore, as the suit was, the bill could only be dismissed. What the Court said was, that Ellis v. Nimmo was not binding, because the grounds on which Sir E. Sugden had decided it were disapproved by his successor, although the decree was affirmed. And then the Vice-Chancellor goes on to say, that Ellis v. Nimmo was wholly unlike the case before him, and to point out in what the two cases differed. So that the authority of Ellis v. Nimmo, whatever it may be, is not touched by the decision in Holloway v. Headington.

If, then, Ellis v. Nimmo is not overruled by either Dillon v. Coppin, Holloway v. Headington, or Meat v. Kettlewell, there is still reason to consider it as by no means clear, having regard to the case of Wright v. Wright above cited, that a contract to assign a possibility, or any other contract resting in fieri, will not be executed, in equity, in favour of a child, or, perhaps, a brother or sister.

The Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association is a very curious association; if conducted with vigour, according to its proposed plan, it will produce very important effects in the position of Attornies and Solicitors, including probably many neither intended nor foreseen by its promoters. We may very shortly state its main objects, by saying that they are to organise the members of the junior branch of the Profession into a compact body, for protecting their own interests, for raising the status of their profession, and for urging in particular on the public, their claim to share with the Bar a considerable portion of the privileges hitherto enjoyed by the Bar. These may or may not be proper objects, and beneficial to the public; but they are the objects, as avowed with tolerable clearness by the Metropoli-and Provincial Law Association. Hear the Second Annual Report of the Society *:—

"Upon every ground, therefore, of public utility, as well as of professional advantage, to enable Attornies and Solicitors to vindicate their claims to a high and honourable standing in the community, and to defend themselves from dangers both from within and without their own body, the committee deem it essential that the Profession should, by uniting, obtain a common as well as an individual opinion and voice. Ought they, then, to be discouraged at the comparatively little success which has attended previous efforts? The committee think not, and for the following reasons:—No effort has been previously made which was really calculated to meet the wants of the Profession. The various provincial societies have effected, and are effecting, much good; but without some central union they are only calculated to produce a partial effect. United in operation, as they are becoming at present, with the metropolitan office, they gain an increased power to effect their local objects, while, at the same time, they become valuable auxiliaries in promoting any action of the whole Profession. With a view to the interests of the Profession throughout the kingdom, there is the same reason for the various provincial societies uniting together, in order to possess an organisation giving them the means of a common action, as there is for the individual Solicitors of any locality doing so for the same purpose. The Incorporated Society, which, until the establishment of the Metropolitan and Provincial Association, was the only body drawing its members from the whole Profession, has also effected much good, and forms a valuable means of preserving and enforcing those privileges which yet remain in their possession, as well as of exercising a wise supervision over the scattered members of the Profession, and over the candidates for admission into its ranks; but it is not by itself, and, from its constitution, probably can never be, sufficient to meet the wants of the Profession: and some of its most valuable characteristics are precisely those which prove the necessity which exists for another association, zealously co-operating with the Incorporated Society, wherever that is possible; but, at the same time, more unfettered in its action, and more capable of modification to meet the views of its members. A chartered and privileged body can never be the means of agitating the various questions which it is important for Solicitors to see raised at the present time; besides which, the Incorporated Society must always be too expensive, and too predominantly metropolitan in its character and government, fairly and satisfactorily to represent a body so scattered as the Attornies and Solicitors of England and Wales.

"Again, at no former period has the necessity for union been so manifest. The whole course of recent legislation—the steps which have been successfully made by the Bar to gain an exclusive monopoly of the Inns of Court, giving them a power, in many points, uncontrolled even by the Legislature of the country—the tone and mode of operation of the whole of society, pointing everywhere to the ever-increasing action of companies and associations for obtaining any valuable end—all proclaim that henceforth those who have a common interest must follow the example thus set, and make common cause with each other, or submit to see themselves neglected or oppressed. In the case of Solicitors, their peculiar functions necessarily bring them into immediate contact with the most active powers of the kingdom—the Legislature and the Bar. It is not neglect, which might be comparatively a blessing, it is oppression they have to fear, and against this it is incumbent upon them to unite in self-defence. Heavily taxed beyond the other classes of their fellow-subjects—prevented by act of Parliament from placing their own estimate upon their time and labour—excluded continually more and more strictly from posts of honourable distinction in their own Profession—with an almost impassable barrier between themselves and the higher branch of the Law—always peculiarly liable to be misjudged by the public, who are unable to exercise an enlightened judgment on the value of the advice and aid for which they are compelled to pay, or how far its price depends upon the will of the Solicitor, and how far upon the system, which he is only the means of administering—Attornies and Solicitors will never occupy that position, or enjoy that estimation, to which they are entitled, until they cordially unite in order to vindicate and maintain it."

Again, when the Report comes to touch on the grievances of the Profession:—

"It is a subject," they say, "of frequent and just complaint, that the question whether an action shall be decided by the verdict of a jury, or by the award of an arbitrator, which is one that ought to depend entirely upon the will of the client, guided by the advice of his Attorney, is in practice frequently decided in direct opposition to their expressed wishes; the Barrister and the Judge between them deciding, and frequently from motives of mere personal convenience, that the case shall be referred, after all the necessary expenses of the trial have been already incurred. This is not only an interference with the legitimate province of the Attorney, but it often occasions a serious amount of additional inconvenience and expense, which is a positive loss to the client, be the issue of his cause what it may. Without wishing to cast any unjust imputation upon the gentlemen of the Bar, it is obvious, that, if Barristers gained nothing by a case going before an arbitrator, one motive for their urging references against the wishes of their clients would vanish. The members of the Profession in the north of England not unfrequently act upon this hint, and, if they are compelled to refer, insist, in their turn, upon the reference being to a Solicitor, and not to a Barrister, and frequently also dispense with the services of the Bar in conducting the case when it is before the arbitrator—an arrangement which, at less cost, is quite as advantageous and satisfactory to the client, and which, if the Attornies upon both sides agree to it, cannot be successfully resisted. But, in addition to this, there is a large class of cases which are evidently better fitted for a reference than a trial, and the committee would recommend their professional brethren to take into consideration the expediency of referring to one of their own body all cases which do not go to a verdict, except where the nature of the case seems to call for the peculiar experience of a member of the Bar. The weakness of this branch of the Profession consists, in a great degree, in the way in which they continually play into the hands of their competitors of a higher branch; and there is a palpable inconsistency in their at the same time complaining of being excluded from all posts of honourable distinction, for the benefit of the Bar, and especially from such as partake of a minor judicial character, and yet, whenever they have themselves the appointment of a person to fill a judicial position which is open to themselves in common with the Bar, almost invariably naming, or consenting to the nomination of, a Barrister. Whether it arise from an excess of generosity, or from professional jealousy, it appears to the committee to be equally an unwise and a suicidal policy."

Again, in commenting on the Bankruptcy Bill now before the Legislature:—

"The eighth article provides that a Serjeant-at-Law, or a Barrister of seven years' standing, shall alone be eligible to be appointed a commissioner of the court. Against the monopoly of appointments which is being rapidly consummated by the members of the Bar, the committee think it important to take every opportunity of protesting. The exclusion of Attornies from eligibility as Commissioners in Bankruptcy is a modern innovation, arising solely from the fact that the Bar has gradually succeeded in getting a control over the appointing authorities. It is not warranted by experience, which shews, on the contrary, that the duties of the office have always been as well fulfilled by Attornies as by Barristers; and this is what would be expected from a consideration of the nature of those duties, which arise principally from mercantile matters and questions of account, with which solicitors in large practice have daily to deal, and concerning which it frequently happens that Barristers of much more than seven years' standing are profoundly ignorant. Much of the dissatisfaction which is at present felt by the public with the Bankruptcy Court arises from the fact, that some of the learned Commissioners are not, as they cannot be expected, from their want of experience, to be, sufficiently acquainted with the details of the ordinary transactions of a commercial community. The committee contend, that, having regard to the apprenticeship and examination to which Solicitors are subjected, if seven years' standing at the Bar is to confer eligibility, a similar amount of actual practice as a Solicitor ought also to do so. The committee believe that the experience of the local courts would shew that judges appointed from the ranks of the Attornies are, in general, at any rate as capable of discharging their duties with benefit and satisfaction to the public, as well as to the Profession, as those who have been raised from the junior Bar."

And again, in speaking of the County Courts:—

"The committee cannot allow this opportunity to pass without repeating, in the name of their professional brethren, their protest against those provisions of the County Courts Act, by which Attornies and Solicitors are excluded from eligibility for the appointments of Judges—by which their right of advocacy is rendered dependent upon the will of the Judge—and by which their fees are so restricted as continually to render the conducting of a case in those courts a positive loss to the practitioner. They think that every means should be adopted that seems likely to remedy these grievances, which they feel are obnoxious to every sound principle of public or professional policy."

From all this it is quite clear, that the Society thinks the Bar has an undue preponderance in the public estimation, and means to urge that the Solicitors ought, as a body, to contend against that preponderance.

To us this question has always appeared very free from difficulty, looking, as we do, at both branches of the Profession as made for the public, and not the public for them. As English professional society has been constituted for ages—as we now find it constituted—there is a distinction between the studies and occupations, and, as a consequence, between the position and privileges, of the Bar and of Solicitors. That distinction may be ill founded, and if it is—if it is pernicious to the public—it must, of course, cease. But thus much is certain—there must be either a distinction or no distinction. If it is for the benefit of the public—a point on which we offer no opinion—that the business now entrusted to Barristers should be indifferently entrusted to them or to Solicitors, and that all the inferior judicial appointments now customarily filled by Barristers shall be filled indifferently by them or by Solicitors, the simple operation of all this will be to abolish the distinction between Barrister and Solicitor, and to make every man in the Profession, (except, perhaps, a few leading men, who choose to confine themselves to advocacy), Barrister as well as Solicitor, Solicitor as well as Barrister. It may be that such a change will be for the benefit of the public; but such a change will assuredly follow, if the plans of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association are carried out with success; and the profession of advocate and attorney will become united, as it is in most continental countries—as it is, we believe, almost universally, in America.

The Society has other objects of less questionable utility than that of amalgamating the two branches of the Profession. It proposes to devote its powers to the promotion of rational reform of the law, and particularly to the bringing before the Profession and the Legislature, from time to time, such suggestions for improvements as occur more naturally and frequently to Solicitors than to those who are not acquainted with the details of practice, and the way in which laws practically work. But, even in these law-reforming projects, we perceive that the Association bases its views and feelings upon the idea of the public being made for Solicitors, rather than Solicitors for the public. For instance, in reference to Lord Brougham's proposed extension of the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 119, we find the following in the Society's Report:—

"A short bill, introduced by Lord Brougham, has already passed the Lords, extending the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 119, by which the Taxing Masters were required, in estimating the sum proper to be charged for certain deeds, to consider, not their length, but the skill and labour employed, and the responsibility incurred in their preparation; and enacting, that the same principles shall be applied in taxing the costs for preparing or executing any deed, will, or other instrument in writing.

"No step has yet been taken on this bill in the House of Commons, and the committee hope that it will undergo the careful scrutiny of the Profession before it is suffered to pass into law. The bill upon which it is founded has very rarely been acted upon; but the present measure may be so interpreted as to produce the most sweeping and prejudicial changes in the department of conveyancing, and it calls for active and anxious attention to its progress, that the welfare of the Profession may not be sacrificed to its experimental provisions."

On the whole, we conceive, judging from the Report published by this Society, of its objects and intentions, that it is one calculated to produce, as we have already said, at least important results; but we would caution it against indulging too much in the "class" spirit which seems to animate it. If it does, it will do less good to the public, and more harm to the Profession, than it obviously desires and intends.

This Society transacts the usual Business of Life Assurance, and presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premiums, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or for a Guaranteed Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

The Directors meet on Thursdays, at 2 o'clock. Assurances may be effected by applying on any other day, between the hours of 10 and 4, at the Office of the Society, 57, Chancery-lane, London, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information can be obtained.

Invalid Lives.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

LONDON, JUNE 16, 1849.

At the present time, when so much discussion is taking place upon the constitution and procedure of the courts of equity, it may not be uninteresting to our readers to have brought to their notice some portions of an act recently passed by the Legislature of the State of New York, for the reform and simplification of the law*. Most of our readers are probably aware, that in America the English system of jurisprudence has prevailed, with regard to the separation of the courts into the two great classes of equity and common-law courts; and a perusal of Mr. Justice Story's work on Equity Jurisprudence will shew, that, subject to those slight differences only—differences rather of detail than of principle, which have arisen from the somewhat different state of society to which the jurisdiction of equity has been applied in that country—American equity has been the same, and administered according to the same course of procedure, as English equity†.

In some states of America, distinct courts of equity are established; in others, the powers are exercised concurrently with the common-law jurisdiction, by the same tribunal‡. But, wherever equity has been administered, we believe that the system of pleading and general procedure has closely resembled that pursued in England.

The act of the Legislature of New York State, to which we have referred, commences as follows:—"Whereas it is expedient that the present forms of actions and pleadings in cases at common-law should be abolished, that the distinction between legal and equitable remedies should no longer continue, and that an uniform course of proceedings in all cases should be established: therefore," &c.; and then follows the enacting part.

The portions to which we shall at present specially call the attention of our readers are Title I and Title VI of part II, cc. 1, 2, 3, 4; and Title XII, c. 6.

Title I is as follows:—

"TITLE I.—Of the Form of Civil Actions.

Sect. 69. [62.] The distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits, heretofore existing, are abolished; and there shall be in this state, hereafter, but one form of action, for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a civil action.

Sect. 70. [63.] In such action the party complaining shall be known as the plaintiff, and the adverse party as the defendant.

Sect. 71. [64.] No action shall be brought upon a judgment rendered in any court of this state, (except a court of a justice of the peace), between the same parties, without leave of the court for good cause shewn, on notice to the adverse party: and no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within five years after its rendition, except in case of his death, resignation, incapacity to act, or removal from the county, or that the process was not personally served on the defendant or on all the defendants, or in case of the death of some of the parties, or where the docket or record of such judgment is or shall have been lost or destroyed.

Sect. 72. [65.] Feigned issues are abolished; and instead thereof, in the cases where the power now exists to order a feigned issue, or when a question of fact, not put in issue by the pleadings, is to be tried by a jury, an order for the trial may be made, stating, distinctly

* "An Act to amend an Act intituled 'An Act to simplify and abridge the Practice, Pleadings, and Proceedings of the Courts of this State,' passed April 12, 1848. (Passed 11th April, 1849)."

and plainly, the question of fact to be tried, and such order shall be the only authority necessary for a trial."

Title VI is as follows:—

"TITLE VI.—OF THE PLEADINGS IN CIVIL ACTIONS.

Chapter I.—The Complaint.

Sect. 140. [118.] All the forms of pleading heretofore existing, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are abolished; and hereafter the forms of pleading in civil actions in courts of record, and the rules by which the sufficiency of the pleadings is to be determined, are modified, as prescribed by this act.

Sect. 141. [119.] The first pleading on the part of the plaintiff is the complaint.

Sect. 142. [120.] The complaint shall contain—

1. The title of the cause, specifying the name of the court in which the action is brought, the name of the county in which the plaintiff desires the trial to be had, and the names of the parties to the action, plaintiff and defendant.
2. A statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.
3. A demand of the relief to which the plaintiff supposes himself entitled. If the recovery of money be demanded, the amount thereof shall be stated.

Chapter II.—The Demurrer.

Sect. 143. [121.] The only pleading on the part of the defendant is either a demurrer or an answer. It must be served within twenty days after the service of the copy of the complaint.

Sect. 144. [122.] The defendant may demur to the complaint, when it shall appear upon the face thereof, either—

1. That the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or the subject of the action; or,
2. That the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue; or,
3. That there is another action pending between the same parties, for the same cause; or,
4. That there is a defect of parties, plaintiff or defendant; or,
5. That several causes of action have been improperly united; or,
6. That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Sect. 145. [123.] The demurrer shall distinctly specify the grounds of objection to the complaint. Unless it do so, it may be disregarded. It may be taken to the whole complaint, or to any of the alleged causes of action stated therein.

Sect. 146. [125.] If the complaint be amended, a copy thereof must be served on the defendant, who must answer it within twenty days; or the plaintiff, upon filing with the clerk, on proof of the service, and of the defendant's omission, may proceed to obtain judgment, as provided by sect. 246; but where an application to the Court for judgment is necessary, eight days' notice thereof must be given to the defendant.

Sect. 147. [126.] When any of the matters enumerated in sect. 144 do not appear upon the face of the complaint, the objection may be taken by answer.

Sect. 148. [127.] If no such objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant shall be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Chapter III.—The Answer.

Sect. 149. [128.] The answer of the defendant shall contain—

1. In respect to each allegation of the complaint controverted by the defendant, a general or specific denial thereof, or a denial thereof according to his information and belief, or of any knowledge thereof sufficient to form a belief.
2. A statement of any new matter constituting a defence, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.

Sect. 150. [129.] The defendant may set forth, by answer, as many defences as he shall have. They shall each be separately stated, and refer to the causes of action which they are intended to answer, in any manner by which they may be intelligibly distinguished.

Sect. 151. The defendant may demur to one or more of several causes of action stated in the complaint, and answer the residue.

Sect. 152. Sham answers and defences may be stricken out on motion.

Chapter IV.—The Reply.

Sect. 153. [131.] When the answer shall contain new matter, the plaintiff may, within twenty days, reply to it, denying, generally or particularly, each allegation controverted by him, or any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief; and he may allege, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, any new matter not inconsistent with the complaint, in avoidance of the answer, or of any defence set up therein; or he may demur to the same for insufficiency, stating in his demurrer the grounds thereof. And the plaintiff may demur to one or more of several defences set up in the answer, and reply to the residue.

Sect. 154. If the answer contain a statement of new matter, constituting a defence, and the plaintiff fail to reply or demur thereto within the time prescribed by law, the defendant may move, on a notice of not less than ten days, judgment, as he is entitled to upon such statement; and, if the case require it, a writ of inquiry of damages may be issued.

Sect. 155. If a reply of the plaintiff, to any defence set up by the answer of the defendant, be insufficient, the defendant may demur thereto, and shall state the grounds thereof."

Title XII, c. 6, is as follows:—

"Chapter VI.—Examination of Parties.

Sect. 389. [343.] No action to obtain discovery under oath, in aid of the prosecution or defence of another action, shall be allowed; nor shall any examination of a party be had, on behalf of the adverse party, except in the manner prescribed by this chapter.

Sect. 390. [344.] A party to an action may be examined as a witness, at the instance of the adverse party, or of any one of several adverse parties; and for that purpose may be compelled, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules of examination, as any other witness, to testify, either at the trial, or conditionally, or upon commission.

Sect. 391. [345.] The examination, instead of being had at the trial, as provided in the last section, may be had at any time before the trial, at the option of the party claiming it, before a judge of the court or a county judge, on a previous notice to the party to be examined, and any other adverse party, of at least five days, unless, for good cause shewn, the judge order otherwise. But the party to be examined shall not be compelled to attend in any other county than that of his residence, or where he may be served with a summons for his attendance.

Sect. 392. [346.] The party to be examined, as in the last section provided, may be compelled to attend, in the same manner as a witness who is to be examined conditionally; and the examination shall be taken and filed by the judge in like manner, and may be read by either party on the trial.

Sect. 393. [347.] The examination of the party, thus taken, may be rebutted by adverse testimony.

Sect. 394. [348.] If a party refuse to attend and testify, as in the last four sections provided, he may be punished as for a contempt, and his complaint, answer, or reply may be stricken out.

Sect. 395. [349.] A party examined by an adverse party, as in this chapter provided, may be examined on his own behalf, in respect to any matter pertinent to the issue. But if he testify to any new matter, not responsive to the inquiries put to him by the adverse party, or necessary to explain or qualify his answers thereto, or discharge when his answers would charge himself, such adverse party may offer himself as a witness on his own behalf, in respect to such new matter, and shall be so received.

Sect. 396. [350.] A person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, though not a party to the action, may be examined as a witness, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules of examination, as if he were named as a party.

Sect. 397. [351.] A party may be examined on the part of his co-plaintiff or a co-defendant; but the examination thus taken shall not be used on behalf of the party examined, except as against the examining party. And whenever, in the case mentioned in sects. 390 and 391, one of several plaintiffs or defendants, who are joint contractors, or are united in interest, is examined by the adverse party, the other of such plaintiffs or defendants may offer themselves as witnesses to the same cause of action or defence, and shall be so received."

We refer particularly now to these articles of the American act, because they have a very decided bearing on the subject of reform in Chancery pleading, and because the new forms of proceeding directed by this act singularly resemble the forms that we endeavoured, in a recent Number of THE JURIST, to sketch out for proceedings in equity in this country; so much so, indeed, that, if the publication of our suggestions had not preceded the receipt by us of a copy of the American act, we should have been fearful of exposing ourselves to the charge of plagiarism. As it is, we see, with great satisfaction, that a system of pleading in equity, so closely resembling that which we have advocated, has been actually adopted by the Legislature of a people, of whom it cannot, at any rate, be said, that they are either unpractical or unmindful of their own interests.

In considering the sixth title of the American act, in reference to its application to equity pleading, it will be perceived that it does exactly what we have recommended for our equity pleading. It substitutes for the allegations, charges, and interrogatories of a bill, a plain statement of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action, specially directing that it shall be in ordinary and concise language, and without repetition. With reference to the defence, it requires, as we suggested, that the defendant shall answer the allegations generally or specifically; by which is meant, no doubt, that he shall answer as substantially as if he were interrogated; and, indeed, to this point is probably addressed the 152nd section, that sham answers and defences may be stricken out on motion. The special examination of a defendant, which we proposed to leave, in certain cases, to be dealt with by interrogatories, is supplied, in the American act, by the power given to examine the parties to a suit—a power which has been tried, and has worked very well, in our county courts, and which, we believe, would be found to forward the ends of justice, if applied, both in equity and at common law, in the superior courts. The substantial change, then, which will be effected by the American act, as regards equitable procedure, will be to substitute for the bill and interrogatories, which pleaders are by custom compelled to make lengthy, a concise statement of facts, specially directed by the Legislature to be concise; to abolish pleas; to allow no defence but by way of either demurrer or answer; and to maintain the jurisdiction to ransack the conscience of parties, as it is termed, by making them liable to be examined, and extending this examination, very properly, as we think, to the plaintiff as well as the defendant. The new form of pleading, of its nature, tends to much greater brevity than the present forms; and in aid of this tendency is that which is the pith and marrow of the act—an express direction, that statements shall be concise, and in ordinary language. We have not ourselves the slightest doubt, that a change, of a similar character, in our equity proceedings, would work well, both for the public and the Profession; and we hope to see it, before long, brought to the attention of the Legislature.

There is much more in the American act to which we may hereafter call attention; but, as the genius of the people of the country is for bit-by-bit reform in law, as in everything else, we do not desire at present to prejudice the cause of reform in equity procedure, by entangling our readers in the consideration of any sweeping alteration of the jurisdiction and procedure of courts generally. We content ourselves with attacking the one clear evil of a ponderous, intricate, and intensely verbose system of Chancery pleading; and in urging the adoption of forms which, if they are at first startling from their simplicity, will become more apparently applicable the more they are considered.

LONDON, JUNE 23, 1849.

The act of the New York Legislature, which we noticed in our last number, has abolished equity jurisprudence as a separate system, and has substituted for bills of discovery the examination, as witnesses, of the parties to an action. Supposing the bill of discovery to continue as a part of our Chancery procedure, it is still an important and pressing question, whether the less expensive and dilatory, and the more efficient, mode of examining a party to a cause vivâ voce and in open court, as any other witness, should not be established as a concurrent common-law remedy. We understand that Lord Brougham has introduced a bill into the House of Lords which (amongst other alterations in the law of evidence) will give the right of thus extracting evidence from the plaintiff and defendant to an action. We have long thought such an enactment advisable, and hope that it will be numbered among the statutes of this session.

When it is remembered that evidence is the means of discovering the truth, it will be obvious that we should not narrow or exclude its operation, except upon strong and sufficient reasons. We should rather increase than diminish the means of arriving at the truth; and the tendency of modern times is to remove those arbitrary rules which have interfered with the natural course of investigation—that is, the course which would have been adopted but for those rules, and which is adopted in all but legal inquiries. The exclusion of the evidence of parties to a cause now prevails only in civil causes in our superior common-law courts; and even in such instances the rule is subject to several exceptions, and rests on a foundation which has been considered insufficient for the exclusion of the testimony of third persons.

In our Courts of Chancery, in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and now in the County Courts, evidence can be obtained from the parties to a cause. So, in our Criminal Courts, the prosecutor is always examined, though he entitle himself to the restoration of stolen property by the conviction, or to costs where the indictment has been removed by certiorari. (See R. v. Muscot, 10 Mod. 193). And a person entitled to a reward on conviction, (Id.), and an accomplice, though his expectation of pardon depend on the conviction, (1 Hale, 303; Mead v. Robinson, Willes, 423), may give their evidence. If such testimony is dangerous, it should certainly not be admitted in criminal cases; and it is no sufficient answer to say that the Crown is the prosecutor, as it is so only in a nominal sense; nor can it be urged, that, if such evidence were excluded, guilt would frequently go unpunished, the prosecutor being often the only witness of the offence, or capable of substantiating it; for this is one of the reasons urged for its admission in civil causes, namely, that justice is sometimes defeated through rejecting the information which could be afforded by the parties themselves, and by them alone. The principle of excluding testimony on the ground of interest may be said to have been virtually abandoned by Lord Denman's Act; and yet interest is the only legal ground for the incompetency of parties to the suit as witnesses. (Worrall v. Jones, 7 Bing. 398). If not interested, though nominally parties, they may be examined. Thus, a defendant who has suffered judgment by default, in an action ex contractu (Pipe v. Steel and Harvey, 2 Q. B. Rep. 733) or ex delicto, (Hadrick v. Heslop and Raine, 12 Jur. 600), may be a witness for the plaintiff, but not for the defendant. (Thorpe v. Barber, 5 C. B. 675). And, since Lord Denman's Act, a prochein amy, though liable for the costs, may be examined for the plaintiff. (Sinclair v. Sinclair, 13 Mee. & W. 640). So, one who expects to receive half of the amount sought to be recovered in the action; (Hill v. Kitching, 3 C. B. 299); a person who has agreed to indemnify the defendant against the costs may be called for him; (Sage v. Robinson, 12 Jur. 1054); the sheriff's officer is a competent witness for the defendant in an action against a sheriff for not taking a defendant on a ca. sa.; (Wilson v. Magnay, 1 C. & K. 291; Wheeler v. Senior, Id. 293); and a person under whom the defendant has justified, in an action of trover, may be called for him. (Hearne v. Turner, 2 C. B. 535; and see, in ejectment, Doe v. Nicholls, 18 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 81). Since, as before, Lord Denman's Act, the nearest relations (except the wife) of a party to a suit may be examined for and against him, although their bias must frequently be as strong as any that can be given by a pecuniary interest.

It may, therefore, be stated, as the result of the present system, that third persons may be examined in an action, whatever may be the amount of their interest in the event of the cause, but that parties to the action may not be examined because they are interested.

It is impossible to predicate the amount of interest which will induce a person to commit perjury; but it is not difficult to see that, cæteris paribus, the mere fact of being named on the record will not make any difference in this respect. A party to an action, interested to the extent of 1000*l*., is not more likely to perjure himself than one who is not a party, but who has an equal interest. It must also be borne in mind, that the great test of truth and falsehood—vivâ voce cross-examination in open court—would be applied, and not sparingly, to the parties examined as witnesses.

Further arguments appear to us unnecessary to shew that the exclusion of the evidence of parties to an action does not rest on any sound or consistent principle; and that objections should be confined to the credibility, not to the admissibility, of such evidence.

COURTS-MARTIAL are courts of honour; but they are also courts of justice, and to some extent courts of law; that is, they are, or at least ought to be, governed, in regard to the general rules of right and wrong, and in particular in regard to the reception and sifting of evidence, by the general principles which regulate the same matters before a judge and jury. Assuming this to be so, the publicly-recorded proceedings of a court-martial are as properly the subject of criticism in these pages as those of any other court; and we proceed, therefore, in the exercise of that part of our duty which consists in calling the attention of our readers to cases in which courts appear to us to have miscarried, to criticise the decision pronounced by a general court-martial* recently held in the island of Guernsey, in which the prisoner, an officer in the 16th regiment, was declared guilty, first, of direct falsehood; and, secondly, of evasive concealment of the truth; and punished accordingly by being dismissed the service. We need not remind our readers that the offence of lying, directly or indirectly, constituting, among all classes of gentlemen, what would be termed ungentlemanlike conduct, amounts, by the articles of war—which are the code of law governing the army—to a military crime, falling clearly within the general definition of scandalous or infamous behaviour, "unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman." (Articles of War, 1847; Art. 80). We think it right also to premise, that we write as legal critics, and as legal critics only, having no personal knowledge whatever of the prisoner, Captain Douglas, and no knowledge of the facts of the case, except as they appear by the report of the proceedings.

The material facts lie in a very small compass. Captain Douglas and another officer, Mr. Parker, were, on the 5th January, 1849, practising pistol-firing with ball on the ramparts of Longy Battery, which was close upon the sea-coast. On the following day a bullock, belonging to a farmer in the neighbourhood, was found dead on the beach, close under the spot where the firing had taken place, with a wound in the head like a wound made by a bullet. Suspicion fell on the two officers, who, it was supposed, had, or might have, shot the animal, and afterwards thrown it over the cliff to conceal the transaction. In consequence, on the 8th January, a constable was sent, by the judge of the island of Alderney, to question Captain Douglas on the subject; and on what passed between this man and Captain Douglas, and on his evidence only, rested the first charge against the prisoner, viz. that of direct falsehood. In order to clear the case of all extraneous matter, we may state at the outset, that the question, who had killed the bullock, or whether it had been killed at all, was not before the Court: the prisoner had, in the course of preliminary inquiries, denied having done so, and was believed. The case before the Court was, that Captain Douglas, having been asked, on the 8th, by the constable, whether he had a knowledge of the person or persons who had been firing ball on the ramparts of Longy Battery on the 5th January, 1849, had answered, that he had no knowledge of such person or persons; whereas he, Captain Douglas, well knew, at the time he so made answer, that he himself had been firing ball on the said ramparts on the said 5th January, 1849.

Of course it is needless to say that the prisoner denied having uttered this lie. What he stated was that he had been asked whether he had, or any one about the barracks had, shot a bullock; and that he had replied, he had not: or that the question might have been put in this form—that there had been practising with ball on the battery, and a bullock had been shot, and did he know who had done it? And he replied, he did not. The question being, not whether the prisoner had falsely denied having shot the bullock, but whether he had falsely denied having been practising at pistol-firing, it is obvious that the form in which the question had been put, was most material. The question, lie or no lie, became, in fact, a question of verbal criticism, if the evidence as to the exact que-tion and exact reply was not perfectly clear. Now, the evidence was this:—The constable, on being asked by the Deputy Judge-Advocate what had passed, said, first—"I was sent by Judge Gaudion, of Alderney, to inquire about a bullock that had been shot. I asked him if he knew anything about it, and he said, 'No.' I asked him if he knew anything about a bullock that had been shot, and if he had been firing, on the 5th January, on the ramparts. I told him, that it appeared there had been ball-firing on the battery. His answer was, 'We have had no ball-firing since we have been here.'" Here, therefore, the witness reports the prisoner not to have given a mere denial, but to have made a specific statement. On being further questioned by the Court, the following is the evidence:—

"Q. Did you ask Captain Douglas whether he knew who the person was who had been firing?

A. I asked him if he knew the person who had done it—meaning the shooting. I did not ask him who had been firing. I asked him whether he knew anything of the firing which took place on the 5th. [Read over, witness corrects himself—'I did not ask him if he knew the person, but if he knew anything about it.']

Q. What do you mean by 'had done it?'

Captain Douglas here begged to say that he considered the question objectionable. The point was, not what the witness meant, but what he said to Captain Douglas, at the time; so that the Court might be placed in the situation of persons present at the interview between him and the constable.

The President ordered the court to be cleared. On its being re-opened, he said—'The Court decides that there is no objection to the question.' On which it was put to this witness, who gave some answer, which appeared to have been misunderstood by the Deputy Judge-Advocate. On his repeating it,

Captain Douglas rose and said—'I beg of the Court that the actual words used by the witness may be taken down, in the first instance, as he utters them?'

President.—Certainly. I consider that quite essential.

Q. By the Court, resumed.—Referring to your former answer, what did you mean by 'had done it?'

A. Had been firing there. That is what I meant."

Here, it will be observed, the witness says he did not ask the prisoner whether he had been firing, which he had previously said he did, but if he knew who had been firing; and further, that, at first, he says, that by the expression "who had done it," he referred to the shooting—that is, it must be presumed, the shooting of the bullock, and not the firing; and afterwards he says, that, by that expression, he was referring to the firing. At a subsequent part of the evidence he speaks of finding flattened bullets on the grass at the end of the wall; and he explains, that by end of the wall he means at the bottom of the wall, and then that he meant under the wall. It was in evidence that the native tongue of this witness was French; and the judge, (Mr. Gaudion), in his evidence, stated his doubt whether the witness understood the correct meaning of expressions in English; adding, that in his court he gave his evidence in French. It needs, indeed, scarcely any other evidence than the internal evidence of his own statements, to see that he did not know the meaning of words, when he could confound the end and the bottom and the under part of a wall. The evidence, also, which this witness had given on the preliminary inquiry referred to, was put in, and that was as follows:—"Hier je vis le Capt. Douglas aux casernes de Longis, et lui demandai s'il avait connaissance de celui ou ceux qui avaient tiré à balles dans la Batterie; il me dit que non."—"Yesterday I saw Captain Douglas at the barracks at Longy, and asked him if he had any knowledge who had been ball-firing in the battery? He said, 'No.'" So that at one time the witness says he put a specific question, and received a particular denial; at another, he says, he put a general question, and received a specific statement, amounting to a denial. He varies also in the statement of the order or form in which he put his question; so that it cannot be gathered from his evidence whether he expressed himself so that the prisoner must have understood him to refer to shooting the bullock, or to the practising. If to the former, the answer was a true one; if to the latter, it was a falsehood. Now, this was the only witness as to the fact of lie or no lie; and if it had rested there, we should have thought that nothing in the shape of a tribunal above the calibre of the commonest of common juries would, on evidence so demonstrative of infirmity of memory, and inaccuracy in the use and appreciation of language in the witness, have found a gentleman guilty of the charge of direct falsehood. But, in addition, it was proved that the prisoner had, shortly before the visit of the constable, told a surgeon of Alderney, in the presence of another officer, that he had been firing. To have told the constable immediately afterwards the alleged lie, would have been to tell so useless—nay, so dangerous—a lie, as to render it highly improbable that it had been told. We conceive, on the whole, that, on the first charge, the decision of the Court is altogether wrong, on the ground of its being unsupported by the evidence.

The next point on which it appears to us that the court-martial miscarried, is in awarding the sentence of cashiering upon the second charge, which was, that the prisoner, on certain specified occasions of official inquiry, viz. a military court of inquiry, and an investigation before the civil court into the cause of the death of the unhappy bullock, had omitted and neglected and refused to acknowledge that he had been practising ball-firing on the ramparts of Longy Battery, he knowing that the object of such inquiry was to ascertain whether he had been so firing. The finding of the Court is, that he had omitted and neglected, omitting the word refused. Now, assuming the evidence to bear out the substance of the charge, (which, however, after an attentive perusal, we think is very doubtful, as it is not at all clearly in evidence that the prisoner was apprised of or knew the specific object of the inquiries), we think it is almost beyond question that the charge, if proved, does not support the allegation of military crime, viz. that of conduct "unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman." For, if we look to the 80th article of war, 1847, (the act under which courts-martial exercise jurisdiction in respect of conduct "unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman"), we find that the court is not left to any vague notions of what is or is not fit conduct for an officer and a gentleman. The article of war explains itself what it means, viz. that the conduct must be conduct in itself scandalous or infamous. "Any officer who shall behave in a scandalous, infamous manner, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman." And that this is the construction put on the articles of war by courts-martial, see a book of great reputation on that subject. (Simmons on Courts-Martial, pp. 371 et seq., and the cases referred to at pp. 438, 439). The question, then, is, whether omitting and neglecting to acknowledge having done a particular thing, in itself innocent, is scandalous or infamous conduct. The act of firing for ball practice was in itself clearly lawful and innocent. It was not imputed to the prisoner that it was otherwise. The reason for the preliminary official inquiries, both military and civil, was, that the fact of the prisoner having been engaged in firing, if established, might be used as presumptive evidence of his having committed the outrage of shooting the bullock. Now, as the prisoner knew himself to be guiltless of the outrage, and also knew, as the fact was, that the voluntary supplying of evidence of an act in itself innocent, but which might be used against him, might expose him, and undeservedly, to civil liabilities, he had the clearest imaginable right to refuse to supply that evidence. To require otherwise would be to require a man himself to furnish circumstantial evidence of a crime of which he knows himself to be innocent. We apprehend, therefore, that the prisoner could lawfully refuse, à fortiori neglect, at any stage of the proceedings, to give any answers, if he had been in terms asked, which he was not, whether he had been firing. We will not insult the understandings of our readers, by argument to shew that this would be so in any criminal procedure at law; but that it is also clear military law will be seen by referring to the book above referred to, in which, after citing a decision of his Majesty King William IV, (and be it remembered that the decisions of the Crown, in matters of military law, are law, if not inconsistent with the statute or common law), the writer goes on to say, of military courts of inquiry:—"The accused, attending the investigation, may avail himself of the opportunity to explain any particular act in any part of his conduct in which an imputation prejudicial to him may have arisen; or he may reserve his defence or exculpation, submitting a request for trial by a court-martial *."

It is clear, then, that Captain Douglas had a right to withhold any statement of his having been engaged in firing; and, if he had, how could the exercise of a right be scandalous or infamous conduct, "unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman?" On this head, therefore, the Court seems to have miscarried, assuming the charge to have been proved, by treating a right as a military crime, and consequently awarding punishment when it had no power to do so.

On the third and fourth charges the Court appears to us to have been equally wrong. The substance of these charges was evasive concealment of the truth. The facts proved, as to one of the charges, were, that the prisoner, on being asked how he accounted for a piece of a newspaper, addressed to him, being found on the ground, replied, "that he could not be accountable for newspapers in his name;" adding, "that his papers travelled through the barracks, and even in the town." It was in evidence that this answer was strictly true; that his papers were sent to one of the serjeants, who lent or did what he liked with them. What, then, did the first part of the answer amount to? Simply to refusing to give any account, which he had a perfect right to do. To construe such an answer into an intentional suggestion of a falsehood, requires a degree of finesse in argument—a species of fanciful suggestion of crime by implication—which, if attempted by a lawyer, would be thought almost "too bad." But that such a forced construction should be adopted by a court-martial, passes all understanding.

The same arguments, in substance, apply to the fourth charge, which was, that in a letter to his superior officer, calling for an explanation of the circumstances with regard to the shooting of the bullock, the prisoner had not stated that he had been firing on the battery, and had stated, as the fact was, that other persons were in the habit of firing there. Now, all that the prisoner could be required to answer, as a matter of duty, was, whether he had killed the bullock or not, because that was the only act which was in itself wrong. To that inquiry he did return an explicit answer, viz. a denial of his having done the act. To the inquiries, which he had a right to refuse to answer, he simply did decline to make any answer. On both these charges, (the third and fourth), the true question was, when it came to one of implied falsehood or not,—Did the proved conduct of the prisoner tend to create a belief that he meant to convey an impression that he had not been firing; or did it merely amount to withholding any statement on the matter, leaving the inquirers to ascertain the fact? We apprehend that the latter is the true result of the evidence, and that not only would it be impossible to extract from it any fair legal inference that the prisoner meant to convey a false idea, but that no man of common penetration could have been led by his conduct to form any unfounded belief, or to collect that he meant anything more than a communication to the effect that he would not make any statement—a privilege to which, we have shewn, he was entitled by the law military—a privilege, therefore, the exercise of which could not be an offence at all; least of all the crime contemplated by the 80th article of war.

So total a misconception of the result of evidence, and so total a misapprehension of the law, as, we think, are apparent in the proceedings of this court-martial, are, happily, not often seen in any of our civil courts. We trust they are not frequent in courts-martial; if they are, the honour of "an officer and a gentleman" is in but fragile keeping.

INVALID LIVES.
In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of lives, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

LONDON, JUNE 30, 1849.

The principle on which compensation is usually given, when any legislative proceeding interferes with what are called vested rights, is not always easy to be understood. We are led to these remarks by the perusal of what has passed in the House of Commons in respect to the bill brought in by Lord Dudley Stuart for giving power to persons, made defendants in the Palace Court, to remove the proceedings into a county court; and in respect to the bill promised by the Attorney-General for abolishing the Palace Court. The difference between the two bills appears to be material: the first does not seem, primâ facie, to call for compensation to the holders of purchased offices in the Palace Court, although it will most effectually reduce the value of those offices; the second will, according to all practice, require, and it has been intimated will provide for, such compensation. With regard to the first bill, it is said that it does not touch the existence of the Palace Court; that it leaves that Court to get, as it did before, what business it can; and leaves untouched the monopoly of its practitioners: that, therefore, there is no case raised by it for compensation to the practitioners, their offices being their vested rights only as monopolies of the business of the Court, and not otherwise. If that is so, the right to compensation for the loss of a right lawfully purchased, and therefore what is designated by the term "vested right," would seem to depend on a question of form, viz. whether the right itself is destroyed, or whether it is rendered valueless by destroying and removing the subject-matter on which it attaches.

The Palace Court was, as most persons know, created letters-patent in the reign of Charles I; and its jurisdiction was, by the patent, very extensive, comprising all personal actions whatever between parties residing within twelve miles of the Palace at Whitehall, the limit to its business being determined by there being a writ of error out of it to the Court of Queen's Bench, and by causes of any magnitude being removable at once to the Queen's Bench or Common Pleas by a writ of habeas corpus cum causâ. Subject to these grounds of removal, any person within the prescribed limits could, and can still, sue in the Palace Court*; and of course, subject to these grounds of removal, the party so sued must appear in the Palace Court, and swell its business.

How the places of the counsel and attornies came to be lawfully the subject of purchase, we are not aware, nor is it very material to inquire, as it seems admitted that they are so. The Legislature has long since treated their possessors as entitled to compensation for the indirect injury created by the establishment of rival courts, likely to abstract business from the Palace Court. This was done so far back as the 23 Geo. 2, c. 27, which, establishing the old Westminster Small Debts Court, gave to each of the four counsellors of the Marshalsea and Palace Courts an annuity of 20*l.* a year, on the ground, that, holding these offices for their lives, and having been made chargeable therefore in respect of their freeholds, they would sustain great loss by the act, unless compensation should be made to them.

* Whether the patent creating the Palace Court is not void may be, and has been, made a question, as may be seen by those who sufficiently affect black letter to refer to the case of Inman v. Batten, (Siderfin, 180), in which is the following passage:—"Nota ceux del Marshalsey ont letters-patents pur deux courts, l'un del Pallace et lauter del Marshalsey, et in declar come est court del Pallace, plaintiff doet averr que nul est del hostel le roy, mes in declar come est court del Marshalsey plaintiff doet averr que ambideux sont del hostell, et Keeling, Justice. Semble, que les letters-patents pur erecting le Pallace Court fueront void, et que chescun que fuit pris per cullour de lour proces poit aver faux imprisonment." The ground of the semble that occurred to the learned judge is not stated. It was probably this—that the Crown had no power, by its letters-patent, to create a court with general jurisdiction, though it might create such a court as the Marshalsea, with jurisdiction as between the members of the King's household.

If, therefore, the patent under which the Court acts is valid, and if the Legislature, in the 23 Geo. 2, c. 27, acted on a sound principle, as regards the ground of compensation for injury to vested rights, there can be no question, that, whether the Palace Court be abolished, or whether its business be driven away from it, by giving power to any party brought before it to take the cause to a county court, the counsel and attornies will sustain great loss, and, therefore, ought to have compensation.

But it may be a very serious question, whether the Legislature did, in the 23 Geo. 2, act upon the true principle, in regard to such vested rights as we are considering; and whether the extent of the vested rights of the practitioners in the Palace Court (or in any other court possessing a special monopoly) is not merely an exclusive right to practise in that court—not a right to exclude the Legislature from erecting a concurrent jurisdiction. If having an interest not only in the continuance of a court, but in the absence of any other court, and being subjected to taxation, be the test of a right to compensation, every counsel and attorney practising in the courts of common law had a claim for compensation on the creation of the county courts, which, unquestionably, caused them considerable loss. But the Legislature has not adopted, nor has any one ever dreamed that it should have adopted, that test. The interest of a practitioner in the exclusive existence of his court may be increased in amount, but is not varied in character, by his having an exclusive privilege to practise. The fact seems to be, that the right of property that the holder of a privileged office in a court has in it, is a property in the office, and no more. If the office is abolished, or if, being in the nature of a monopoly, participants are introduced, his right of property is invaded, and his right to compensation accrues. But if, leaving his office untouched, not only as to its existence, but as to its exclusiveness in the court, the Legislature creates another court, or enables the Queen's subjects to apply to another court already existing, has the holder of the office any greater ground for saying that his right of property is invaded, than the tollkeeper of the sole road between two points would have, if the Legislature thought fit to permit the making of a second road?

We conceive the true principle is this—that the holder of an office has a vested right in the continuance of his office, but that he has not necessarily, though he may have under circumstances, a vested right in the continuance of the state of things that furnishes the pabulum wherewith his office is nourished.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Francis John Sheppard, of Wells, Somersetshire; George Spackman, of Bradford, Wiltshire; George Holford, of Manchester; Thomas Perrior Fleetwood, of Maidstone, Kent.

THE JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES WINDING-UP ACT, 1848, (11 & 12 VICT. c. 45).

Many of the cases upon the Winding-up Act are collected and commented upon in an able article, ante, p. 122. Some of these cases have since been affirmed on rehearing. One of the most important has been reversed, and several new decisions have been reported. As the subject is one of considerable importance, and of very general interest at this moment, we venture to offer a short notice of the additional cases, which must be considered supplementary to the article (ante, p. 122) already referred to, as by another hand.

Sect. 1. As to the Companies within the Act.—The most important decision on this section is, that railway companies formed after the passing of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, only provisionally registered under that act, and which have abandoned their purpose before obtaining an act of Parliament, are within the Winding-up Act.

Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce seems to have held this doctrine in the case of Re The Brighton, Lewes, and Tonbridge Wells Direct Railway Company, (1 De G. & S. 604); but in the subsequent case of Ex parte Barker, In re The London and Manchester Direct Independent Railway Company, (13 Jur. 182, and noticed ante, p. 122), on more mature consideration, his Honor seems to have changed that opinion. The Lord Chancellor, however, on a rehearing of the last-mentioned case before him, (reported 13 Jur. 395), reversed his Honor's decision, and decided, in conformity with the view of the Editor of THE JURIST, (stated ante, p. 61), that such railway companies were, in their imperfect condition, within the provisions of the Winding-up Act.

To include railway companies of the nature we have mentioned, if formed before the passing of the Winding-up Act, they must be within the description given in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, or c. 111, s. 1; i. e. they must be considered companies "established" for "commercial purposes," or for "purposes of profit;" or, in the language of the latter act, "associated" for "commercial or trading purposes." The Lord Chancellor, in his judgment in the last-mentioned case, said that the company then in question would have come within the Winding-up Act, if formed after its passing by the force of the last clause of the 1st section. The company was exactly in the condition described above; and it was argued, that it was only associated for the purpose of obtaining an act of Parliament; that it could not trade nor contract, and therefore could not be said to be formed for a commercial purpose. His Lordship, however, considered that the purpose was to make a railway to carry passengers and goods—to "manufacture engines, &c. for the purpose of deriving profit, either by using them for carrying goods, or letting them to others for that purpose." The manufacture of goods for either purpose appeared to his Lordship a commercial speculation within the terms of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and therefore the Winding-up Act applied to such company.

The case of Ex parte Spackman, in re The Agricultural Cattle Insurance Company, has also been reheard before the Lord Chancellor. (See 13 Jur. 415). His Lordship avoided giving an opinion on the question whether this company was within the act, but dismissed the appeal, with costs, on the ground that no case was made for applying the act; none of the tests of insolvency therein specified being shewn to exist, and the company not having been dissolved. (See 1 De G. & S. 599; 13 Jur. 415).

A number of cases is reported in 1 De G. & S. The first of these gives the forms of the petition, of the order of reference to the Master, and of the list of conbutories under the act. (Re The North of England Banking Company, 1 De G. & S. 545).

Then follow decisions as to who are contributories within the definition in sect. 3: of these, Fenwick's case (p. 537) and Reaveley's case (p. 550) are noticed, (ante, p. 122). We subjoin some additional cases on this subject.

In one of these, Mrs. A., wife of J. A., was registered, by such description, as proprietor of shares, purchased with monies arising from her separate estate, in the North of England Joint-stock Banking Company. J. A. sometimes received the dividends, but only as his wife's agent, signing the receipts "for M. A.," and never in his own name alone. In 1847, J. A.'s name was substituted for his wife's in the list of shareholders returned to the Stamp-office, but without the concurrence or knowledge of himself or his wife. Subsequently to that date a claim was made upon J. A. for calls, which he refused to pay. A creditor of the company brought an action against J. A., in the Exchequer, for the amount of his debt, which action was pending at the time of the petition. J. A. had attended shareholders' meetings as though he held shares in his own right. The Vice-Chancellor held, that the husband's name was not properly placed on the list of contributories, there being no evidence that the company ever considered they had any rights in respect of the shares except as regarded the wife, and that, as between the company and the husband, he was not liable, whether or not he was liable to the creditors of the company. On appeal, the Lord Chancellor directed the matter to stand over till the result of the creditor's action in the Exchequer should be known; and it seems this has since been decided, acquitting the husband of all liability. Are we to conclude that the Lord Chancellor thought the question of liability to the company's creditors important in the determination of the other question, as to the husband being a contributory? (Re The North of England Banking Company, Angas's case, 1 De G. & S. 560).

In Armstrong's case the question was, whether W. Armstrong, possessed of certain shares in the company as executor and trustee of the will of J. H., was personally liable, or only as executor; and it appearing that he had signed receipts for the dividends as "executor of J. H.," and also on consideration of the special provisions of the company's deed, the Vice-Chancellor decided, that, as between himself and the company, Armstrong was not personally liable. On appeal, it seems that the Lord Chancellor directed it to stand over until the result of an action at law, by a creditor of the company, against Armstrong, should be known. (Armstrong's case, 1 De G. & S. 565).

R. H., the holder of eighteen shares in the North of England Banking Company, on the 2nd January, 1847, three years before the petition, transferred them to J. C. Article 26 of the company's deed of settlement provided, that, on the transfer of shares to a new holder, the responsibility of the previous holder should cease, except as to his proportion of the losses, if any, sustained by the company up to the period of his ceasing to be such holder. The official managers, one of whom was a continuing shareholder in the company, summoned R. H., under sect. 81 of the statute, to shew cause why his name should not be placed on the list as a contributory; and his name was inserted by the Master, as liable, in respect of eighteen shares, to the debts and losses of the company up to the 1st January, 1847, the day before the date of the transfer. It was argued that R. H. was not, in the first instance, liable to the creditors of the company, and that his name ought not to be placed on the list till the funds of the company, and the means of the continuing shareholders, were exhausted; and also, that one of the official managers, being a continuing shareholder, was bound to indemnify R. H., and had no claim to place his name on the list. The Vice-Chancellor, however, held, that R. H. was properly included among the contributories, overruling the objection raised on account of one of the official managers being a continuing shareholder. His Honor said, that, between R. H. and other former shareholders who had transferred their shares in like manner, there clearly existed a right of contribution, and therefore liability. It appeared that there was one such shareholder upon the list. That the insertion of R. H.'s name did not conclude the course of his liability; that arrangement would take place thereafter, under the 83rd section. (Hawthorn's case, 1 De G. & S. 571). On appeal, the Lord Chancellor affirmed the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, referring to the 84th section, as shewing that the list was to consist of all who were liable to contribute, not of any particular class only, and that the degree of liability was to be determined afterwards. (Ex parte R. Hawthorn, 1 M'N. & G. 49).

The executrix of a shareholder, although she had not received any dividends, but repudiated the profits, liabilities, and engagements of the company, and the testator's estate had been exhausted in payment of his debts, not amounting originally to more than 20*l.*, was properly named a contributory, as executrix, on the list. (Thomas's case, 1 De G. & S. 579).

Where a shareholder did all in her power to transfer her shares to a purchaser, but the proper assent was not obtained from the company, owing to negligence of the directors, before the company stopped payment, the original shareholder was held to be properly named a contributory. (Chartres's case, 1 De G. & S. 581).

The official managers placed Mrs. H.'s name on the list of contributories, required by sect. 78, as executrix of Mr. H., deceased, and gave her notice of the insertion of her name as such executrix, under sect. 78. Her solicitor then attended before the Master, and insisted that her name should not be inserted at all. The Master, after hearing the evidence, altered the insertion of her name by striking out the qualification. It was argued, before the Vice-Chancellor, that the Master had not authority to make such an alteration, under the notice which had been given. The Vice-Chancellor would not intimate whether a new notice ought to be first given; but he said that he could not hold that the lady had waived the objection to the existing notice; and that the proper course was to request the Master to review his report, which would open every question; and the parties might then argue the matter before him on the merits. (Hutchinson's case, 1 De G. & S. 563). So, where a man who had received the dividends on shares, the property of his deceased brother, as his brother's representative, without having, in fact, taken out administration, and the notice was, that the official manager had inserted his name, qualified as representative of his brother, it was decided that the Master had no authority, after such notice, to insert his name without qualification. (Glaholme's case, 1 De G. & S. 583). This case was affirmed on appeal. (1 H. & T. 123).

The next case we notice is one shewing what compromise may lawfully be made by the official manager, under the authority of sect. 88.

T. H., deceased, had been the holder of 280 shares in a company whose affairs were being wound up under the statute, and had personally joined in guaranteeing a debt owing by the company. The official manager claimed to place the name of Mrs. H., executrix and residuary legatee of T. H., on the list of contributories. This was opposed, and, under sect. 88, the official manager agreed to a compromise with Mrs. H., on the terms that she should pay 2000*l.* to him, by two instalments of 1000*l.* each; one on the confirmation of the compromise by the Master; the other on the 30th July, 1849; Mrs. H. to take the proper steps to obtain confirmation by the Court of Chancery, the official manager appearing and consenting; and immediately afterwards Mrs. H. to enter into a deed of covenant with the official manager to pay any further call upon her testator's estate, to the amount of the further sum of 1000*l.*, and execute a first charge on the said estate to secure the performance of the covenant; and it was agreed that Mrs. H. should not be called upon to pay any sum beyond the first 2000*l.* until the debt of the company guaranteed by T. H. should have been satisfied; and that she should recover from the company any sums she might have to pay in respect of that or any other guarantee or liability, or deduct the same from the further sum of 1000*l.* to be paid by her in case of any further call as aforesaid: these terms to be a compromise of all claims, but without prejudice to any right to enforce payment of certain balances of 4035*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, in respect of the then present call, if Mrs. H. should fail in performing the agreement.

The compromise was approved by the Master, who signified such approval by writing the same in the margin of the memorandum of agreement; and, at the request of Mrs. H., he gave out a special certificate thereof. On motion, upon notice, the official manager appearing by counsel to consent, the Vice-Chancellor confirmed the compromise. (Re Nister Dale Iron Company, Hughes's case, 1 De G. & S. 601).

It seems very probable that the construction of this statute will occupy the attention of the Profession for some time to come; and we have, therefore, thought that this short summary of the cases at present reported may not be unacceptable. E. E. K.

This Society transacts the usual Business of Life Assurance, and presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premiums, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or for a Guaranteed Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.
